Recovery Will Last, Experts Tell Roosevelt

U. S. Economists Say Backlog Will Carry Business Gains Into Next Summer

By Cecil B. Dickson

President Roosevelt has received the prediction from his top-ranking economists that the huge fall recovery gains will be maintained, with slight variations, through the winter and well into the summer of 1940.

The forecasts were predicated on the present high-speed business momentum, large backlogs of unfilled orders in the steel and allied durable goods industries and expected heavy buying by warring European powers.

President Roosevelt has relayed the information to Democratic Congressional leaders, who view continuation of present business activity as necessary to a Democratic victory in the Presidential election next year.

Some Foresee Setback

A slight setback in the recovery move is anticipated, however, by some Commerce Department economists, who contend that by March inventories will be built up above the Nation's normal consumption power. But Federal Reserve Board and Treasury economists consider the March prospect as merely a normal interlude, brought about by income tax payments, before the usual spring upturn.

Industrial output, meantime, approached the 1929 peak and the Nation faced the cheerful prospect of the biggest Christmas trade since that year.

The Federal Reserve Board indicated yesterday that industrial production would exceed 125 per cent of the 1923-25 average this month, a new post-depression high. While the usual decline in industrial activity is anticipated over the Christmas holidays, it is expected to resume its present pace in January.

War Orders Take Effect

Demands for coal, steel and petroleum are coming from Italy and Canada. Coal mines as well as steel plants are reported running almost at capacity. Railroads are operating at 80 per cent of the 1923-25 average, a gain of 12 per cent above last year.

[According to the United Press, the Federal Reserve Board reported that steel operations rose 1 point to 93½ per cent of theoretical capacity, the highest in history on a tonnage basis. Heavy building was the second highest of the year and electricity production reached a new record high for the November 11 week, although down slightly from the all-time high established only a few weeks ago. Automobile production increased from the preceding week, although Chrysler—still beset by a labor dispute—failed to produce a single unit. If that manufacturer had been in production, Ward's reports said, output for the week would have set a new record.

[Carloadings dipped less than seasonally for the November 11 week and heartening earnings reports were reported by most of the carriers. In addition, inventory reports generally made more favorable reading than had been anticipated.

Latin-American Trade Grows

[Scores of extra, increased, resumed and new dividends were voted during the week. The flow of disbursements to stockholders also was accompanied in an encouraging number of instances by employe bonuses.—Editor's note.]

War orders from European nations, experts said, are beginning to have their first concrete effects on the domestic situation. Airplane and munitions manufacturers are adjusting themselves to the new "cash-and-carry" neutrality act and are flooding the State Department with applications for shipments abroad.

THE NATIONAL GRID SCENE was marked by two stunning results—North Carolina's 13-3 loss to Duke, and Missouri's 7-6 victory over Oklahoma. The loss, in each case, ended an undefeated season. Cornell and Tennessee, two outstanding bidders for the national title, won easily. Cornell smashed Dartmouth, 35-6, and the Vols turned back Vanderbilt, 13-0.

A prosaic vehicle, a laundry truck, whisked Wallace Allen off on the highest adventure of his 14 years last night.

Wallace, who lives at 1402 Massachusetts avenue northwest, was riding with William Hyde, 19, of 804 I street northwest, who drives a truck for the New System Hand Laundry, 1008 Tenth street northwest. He was sitting in the back of the truck, sunk deep in bundles, when Hyde stopped at 1223 Vermont avenue northwest and clambered out to make a delivery.

Wallace suddenly came to life. Two strange men leaped into the driver's seat and made off with the truck.

"I was sort of scared at first, said Wallace. "So I ducked down under a pile of laundry. One of them climbed back to see what we were carrying and stepped on me. Guess it scared him as much as it did me. He told me to stay there and pretend I was asleep.

"I tried to, but they went so fast—they must have been doing 60—that I just held on."

Soon smoke came drifting into the compartment and Wallace called to the men that the truck was on fire. They stopped in an alley in the rear of the 7700 block of Fourteenth street northwest and discovered one of the rear tires was flat.

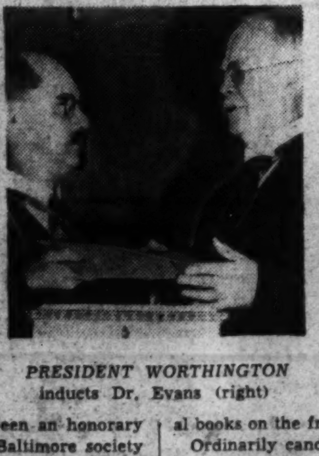
"Then they told me they were going to deliver some clothes," Wallace related. "They picked out a grey suit, took some shirts and handkerchiefs, and ran up the alley."

Wallace made his way to the home of Michael J. Cairns, 7705 Fourteenth street northwest, and telephoned police.

New Generation of Magicians Shows Dr. Evans a Thing or Two

The boys came over from Baltimore last night and showed Dr. Henry Ridgely Evans, the grand old man of magic and dean of the International Brotherhood of Magicians, a time he will not soon forget.

It was a surprise dinner for the 78-year-old retired Federal employe, followed by a mystic rite of initiation into the Society of Osiris, an organization of conjurers.



PRESIDENT WORTHINGTON inducts Dr. Evans (right)

Biographer of Houdini and author of many books on magic, Dr. Evans had been an honorary member of the Baltimore society for several years but not until last night did he become familiar with its bizarre initiation ritual. He was not only inducted but also honored with the title of Past Kher Heb and presented with the appropriate insignia.

Ever since his retirement in 1931 from the U. S. Office of Education, which he served as an assistant editor for many years, Dr. Evans has devoted himself to research in his twin hobbies—magic and Freemasonry. He is a 33d degree Mason and the author of several books on the fraternal order.

President Dedicates Library Today; Hint Seen He Won't Run

By the Associated Press

Hyde Park, N. Y., Nov. 18.—A Presidential aide's statement that the Franklin D. Roosevelt library probably would be opened officially "not earlier than the summer of 1941" developed a new point today for the growing speculation about a third term.

As soon as the aide, William D. Hassett, announced plans for the library, whose cornerstone will be laid by the President tomorrow, persons who have access to the temporary White House here began to talk about this question:

Would President Roosevelt, if he were going to seek a third term, open his personal and official correspondence in 1941 to the scrutiny not only of researchers and students but also of possible critics?

Mr. Roosevelt's present term expires January 20, 1941. His personal and private papers will be preserved in the library now under construction, and, he said through Hassett today, probably would be made available for research and study sooner than those of any former Chief Executive.

There was no answer from White House officials for the President to the new question. Only yesterday Mr. Roosevelt laughed at reporters whom, he said, bit at

Senate Body To Watch D.C. Hearings

King Says Public Discussion Will Serve to Guide Congress Action

The Commissioners' public hearings on the Seal plan for reorganizing the District government will be closely watched by the Senate District Committee and may form the basis for the committee's actions, its chairman, Senator King, said yesterday.

"These hearings will give the people of the District a chance to express their views concerning the plan," said the Senator. "They will bring out information which will determine the course to be pursued by Congress."

Action by the Senate committee will follow promptly on the Commissioners' hearings, Senator King indicated, and might take the form either of holding further hearings or drafting a new bill at once. The Commissioners' hearings are set for November 27.

Chairman Randolph, of the House District Committee, has already expressed the hope that his committee will act early in the coming session. Difference of opinion among members of the committee may hold up House action, however, and in that case Senator King said he will "go right ahead" without waiting on the House.

Views Differ

While Representative Kennedy is a stanch exponent of the Griffenhagen plan, Representative Dirksen wants to enlarge the commission, Representative Bolles prefers a city manager and Representative Nichols inclines to favor the Commissioners' suggestions.

The Seal plan would create 11 departments, with an administrative aide to the District Commissioners. The Commissioners would be given tax-levying powers, but no appropriation authority. Independence of the library trustees and Board of Education would be left untouched.

General approval of the Seal plan was expressed yesterday by leaders of numerous civic organizations who will be represented at the hearings. Specific comment was withheld in most cases until executive committees should study and report on the plan at meetings this week.

L. A. Carruthers, member of the executive committee of the Federation of Citizens Associations, forecast success for the Seal plan because it has the backing of the Commissioners. "It is often said that the District is one of the best governed cities in the country," he said, "and if that is true the views of the people now administering it will receive some weight among the people on the Hill."

Taxpayers Support

The plan will have the support of the Washington Taxpayers Association, according to its president, Rufus S. Lusk, although the association would prefer the "council-manager" type of government. "What Mr. Seal proposes will greatly improve the administration of the District," he said, "and we're not going to try to kill it just because it isn't exactly what we want."

The proposal in the Seal plan to place the Department of Vehicles and Traffic under the Police Department will be opposed by the Keystone Automobile Club, George E. Keneipp, manager, said. "On the basis of a study of traffic administration in other cities and States, we believe that this department should be left intact as it is," he said. "But we have no objection to the other parts of the plan."

Three Killed, Four Injured In Capital Area Traffic

D. C. Man Dies Near Bowling Green, Va.; Aged Woman Hit by Auto on Connecticut Ave.; Motorist Held for Driving After Drinking

Three men were killed and four persons injured, two seriously, yesterday and early this morning in traffic accidents within the Washington area.

One of the severely injured was a District policeman, felled by a hit-run driver. Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, immediately offered a $100 reward for information leading to the driver's arrest, while all Washington and nearby county police joined in a search for the culprit.

Clarence F. Priddy, 45, of Piscataway, Md., an accountant for the WPA, was killed when an automobile he was driving left Route 224, near La Plata, Md., ripped down 30 feet of wire fence, hurtled 25 feet into a field and tossed him through the top to land 40 feet away.

Joseph F. Roberston, colored, 22, of unknown address, his passenger, suffered severe lacerations of the head and shoulders. His condition was said to be undetermined.

Thomas J. Luckett, 45, a lawyer of 202 Central avenue, Capitol Heights, Md., and for 10 years mayor of Capitol Heights, was injured fatally when he was struck last night by an automobile while crossing the street in front of his home. At Casualty Hospital he died of multiple fractures and concussion.

Prague Under Martial Law, Hacha Tells Czechs to Submit; 140 Lost as Mine Sinks Liner

260 Saved as Blast Wrecks Dutch Ship Off English Coast; Latvian Vessel Sunk

By Thomas C. Watson

International News Service Staff Writer

London (Sunday), Nov. 19.—At least 140 men, women and children lost their lives and 124 others were injured when the Royal Netherlands transatlantic liner Simon Bolivar sank in the North Sea yesterday after striking a twin mine which the British admiralty charged had been lawlessly laid by the German navy.

Bound for New York via the West Indies, the Dutch passenger ship took many refugees, including Germans, to their deaths when she capsized and went to the bottom off England's eastern coast in the biggest civilian disaster of the European war to date.

Of the approximately 400 persons aboard, 260 passengers and crew members escaped, but several of them were feared on the point of death due to injuries and exposure. The survivors were picked out of the sea by British naval rescue ships which landed them at an eastern English seaport last night.

Seventeen of them were in such critical condition that they were left in hospitals at the port. The remainder, including 21 children, were brought to London early today and 107 Dutch, German, British and Norwegian survivors were placed in London hospitals.

No Americans Aboard

No Americans were reported to have been aboard the 8,309-ton 12-year-old Simon Bolivar.

A Latvian freighter was also sunk by a mine in the English Channel, with the loss of one life, not far from the scene of the tragedy that overtook the Simon Bolivar. In the same vicinity, it was learned early today, two other ships, not yet identified, were damaged by mines but were able to reach port safely.

The Dutch liner, which had special refugee accommodations installed just before she left her home port of Amsterdam Friday afternoon, was sent to her doom Saturday morning by two violent explosions caused by two explosive globes of a chain mine that struck both sides of her hull near the bow.

The ship's master, Capt. H. Voorsputy, and many others were instantly killed in the first explosion. The second also took a considerable toll of lives. A number of persons met agonizing death by suffocation in smoke and fumes, as all of the ship's fuel oil lines burst and fires sprang up in various parts of the vessel.

Little Time for Boats

The sinking of the Simon Bolivar exceeded in civilian deaths and injuries disaster to the British liner Athenia, which cost 112 noncombatants' lives on the first day of the war. In the present conflict only the torpedoings of the British aircraft carrier Courageous and the battleship Royal Oak took more lives at sea.

Among the survivors in the hospitals at the coastal city were three children less than a year old, and several women. Doctors were battling to save their lives.

Those survivors not seriously injured were suffering from shock and exposure, many of them having

76th Anniversary

The Gettysburg Address

Seventy-six years ago today Abraham Lincoln delivered his immortal Gettysburg address.

In the sound and fury of today, at home and abroad, it is worthwhile to re-read this speech and to meditate upon it.

Fourscore and seven years ago our fathers brought forth upon this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated can long endure. We are met on a great battlefield of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field as a final resting place for those who here gave their lives that that nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this.

But in a larger sense we cannot dedicate, we cannot consecrate, we cannot hallow this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it far above our poor power to add or detract. The world will little note, nor long remember, what we say here; but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us, the living, rather to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us, that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this Nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth.

French Place Merchant Fleet Under British

Unified Control From London Is Phase of New Economic Accord

By P. J. Philip

Copyright by New York Times

Paris, Nov. 18.—As a result of the economic accord concluded in London, the French and British merchant marines, it is learned today, henceforth will be placed under British direction.

The French maritime mission in London, which will be consulted on all questions, will be reorganized and a prominent French official will soon go there to take charge of French interests.

This arrangement, important in conduct of the war and for future mercantile organization, raises many technical questions. The first task of the new command will be to iron out differences in operation so that the two merchant fleets can cooperate in transporting goods purchased abroad in common under the new economic accord.

Some indications of how the plan will operate already have been given. The French and British government no longer will compete for contracts and, when once

Italian Radio Warns Soviet On the Balkans

Unofficial Statement Predicts Resistance if Russia Enters Area

By Herbert L. Matthews.

Rome, Nov. 18.—A warning that Italy would consider Russian penetration in the Balkans in the same light as the Soviet aid to Spain, was given in an Italian news broadcast in English today.

"Italy will resist any attempt to introduce communism in the Balkans," said the speaker. "Should such an attempt be made, it will be met with an immediate resistance no less determined than the reaction in Spain. This determination is necessary to preserve civilization in Europe. Italy's diplomatic and political activity should not be taken to indicate that she intends to take sides in the present conflict."

While the last qualification took much of the sting away from the warning, they were strong words. However, they were restricted to the one broadcast in English. The Italian press printed a much weaker version in its London dispatches. Such protests are not considered official, even though the radio is

One Dead, 3 Hurt by Fires In Prince Georges Homes

One man was burned to death, another seriously burned, a third injured and a woman's hands were seared in two fires in Prince Georges County, Md., last night.

A third fire damaged the historic Mary Surratt home at Clinton, the home in which it was charged the assassination of President Lincoln was plotted. The building, now owned by Mrs. Ella Curtin, suffered slight damage. Seven companies brought the fire under control.

Harvey L. Harmon, 57, of Clinton, was pronounced dead on arrival at Providence Hospital, apparently of asphyxiation, after he dashed into a neighbor's blazing home in an effort at salvage. The neighbor, Albert Edelin suffered cuts to his hands when he smashed a window.

Ira Brashiers, 47, suffered second and third degree burns about the body when his clothing was all but burned off in the bedroom of his home at Berwyn. His wife, Mrs. Dorothy B. Brashiers, was burned on the hands when she endeavored to pull off his clothes before quenching the flames with water. Both were taken to Providence Hospital by the Branchville Rescue Squad.

Harmon was killed when he followed Edelin into the latter's home after they discovered smoke pouring from the first floor. In a few minutes, Harmon staggered out and collapsed on the lawn. He was taken to the hospital by the Marlboro Rescue Squad.

Prague, Nov. 18.—The total of Czechs executed in the last two days reached 12 today, when three more, two of them Czech policemen, were shot "because of a violent attack upon a German."

Word of yesterday's execution of nine students by elite guards quickly spread in the countryside districts, adjoining Prague, and resulted today in further anti-German demonstrations. As a direct result, martial law was decreed by the Czech protectorate government in the districts of greater Prague, including Pragueland, Kladno, Beraun and Horchowitz, although it does not apply to German citizens.

Accuses Agitators

Emil Hacha, president of the Bohemia-Moravia protectorate, broadcast an appeal to the Czech people to maintain calm and quiet, for the events of the last few days, he stated, endangered the status granted the protectorate last March by Fuehrer Hitler.

The Czech people, whose conduct during the present war until now has been exemplary, Hacha stated, have allowed themselves to be agitated by "irresponsible" persons into acts which he extremely regretted. These elements, Hacha added, are under the influence of enemy propaganda, and the agitation of emigrants.

Cautioned on Reprisals

The Czech people are within the living space of the German people, he said, and must understand the results.

It is understandable, the Czech President continued, that the warring German people must erect all the prerequisites for victory, and have all necessary means to do so by force. Czech territory was spared the ravages inflicted on Po-

Now that the tension in the Capital is lessened by the termination of the embargo oratory, officials here seem able to discuss the war with no more heat than, for example, the English and French do.

One amusing speculation has been about the fate of Kaiser Wilhelm in the event the Nazi armies invade Holland. Where will he take refuge?

* * * *

Will he slip across the border into Belgium? Will he throw himself on the bosoms of the English, noted for their hospitality to political refugees? Or will he trust himself to the tender mercies of Herr Hitler?

I now have an expert's report on the "peace cocktail" (35 cents) offered the Capital's connoisseurs at the Willard Hotel.

"It contains," he reports, "about 5 cents worth of flavoring and 30 cents worth of peace!"

One top official who was not flabbergasted or surprised by the Russo-German liaison is Sumner Welles, our glacial Under Secretary of State.

Though he makes no claims to prescience, he foresaw it clearly.

"WATCH RUSSIA!"

"—the Capital's discretion"

For months before the Berlin-Moscow coup his private, confidential watchword had been: "Which way Russia?"

As the arch-type of Washington discretion, however, his premonition was too cryptic for general consumption.

The ultra-confidential manner is used here for utterances of much lesser importance. I cite the case of the miraculously jaunty Mr. McAdoo, who was intercepted recently by journalists in the White House foyer and urged delicately to unleash his views on the issues of the day.

For a few moments he eluded his questioners, confining himself to harmless generalities. Then he was cornered.

He looked cautiously in all directions, into corners and behind pillars.

He cupped his hand at one cheek, leaned forward, and spoke in a half whisper from one corner of his mouth.

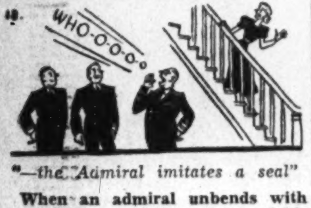
One of the best legendary tales among Navy officers stationed here is about former commandant of the Naval Academy at Annapolis. He was entertaining a couple of middies who had called to take two young ladies of his household to a dance, while they finished dressing.



"—the Admiral imitates a seal"

When an admiral unbends with the middies, he falls back on all his resources. So the commandant was talking about his voyages, and happened to touch on the mating tactics of the bull seals in Alaskan waters. The seals, it seems, parade back and forth, ogle the lady seals and eventually boom out the seals' mating call.

"It goes like this," said the Admiral, and launched a remarkable bellowing call which sounded something like "Woooo!"

There was a light step on the stairs in the hall. The voice of the Admiral's wife floated down.

"Were you calling me, dear?" she asked.

Utility Chief Accuses TVA of Defamation

Alabama Power Head Says Lilienthal Is Hurting Refinancing

By the Associated Press

Thomas W. Martin, president of the Alabama Power Co. accused Director David E. Lilienthal, of the Tennessee Valley Authority, of "continuing the campaign of defamation of utilities" by charges he made yesterday in a speech at Lafayette, Ala.

Lilienthal said the power company was opposing the Government's rural electrification program by a "dog-in-the-manger policy of fighting farmers' cooperatives."

"Alabama Power Co.," Martin said in a statement given out here, "has a national record for building rural lines which apparently has escaped Mr. Lilienthal's attention. This is natural because the program was well developed before Mr. Lilienthal knew anything about the power business."

Martin declared that "more than 7,000 miles of rural lines, costing approximately $10,000,000, have thus been built to serve more than 36,000 customers . . . without a single dollar donated by the Federal Government such as is given to REA and TVA, and all of these lines built by the company have been subject to taxation."

Wilkie Settlement Cited

"It is apparent," he said, "that Mr. Lilienthal is continuing the campaign of defamation of utilities which has rendered it impossible for utilities in the area of TVA to refinance or to raise new money for construction."

A long controversy between the TVA and the power companies apparently was ended August 15 when Commonwealth & Southern Corporation disposed of its Tennessee Electric Power Co. properties to TVA for $78,425,096.

Lilienthal had criticized the Alabama subsidiary at a six-county gathering at Lafayette yesterday celebrating energizing of the Tuscaloosa River Electric Membership Corporation's 377-mile lines, financed from a $325,000 REA allotment.

"Last winter," he said, "the power companies of the Southeast and the TVA, after years of controversy, worked out their differences in a spirit of compromise and reasonableness.

Hill Backs Lilienthal

"I though that the Alabama Power Company would, in the spirit and following the lead of other utilities, inaugurate a policy of harmony with cooperative associations like your own, and with the REA. Instead, you have been the object of the same old policy of antagonism and obstruction."

Tallapoosa River section farmers, he said, tried unsuccessfully "for 20 years" to obtain rural electrification from the Alabama company and were met with "spite lines" and hostile propaganada when they undertook to do the job themselves.

Senator Hill (Democrat, Alabama), sharing the speakers' platform with Lilienthal, likewise criticized the Alabama Power Co. and also charged that President Wendall Wilkie of Commonwealth & Southern sought to obstruct the Tallapoosa electrification.

"We are here today to declare war on these economic carpetbaggers," he declared. "We want every honest concern, every honest man, to come and live with us; to help us develop the South. But we don't want them to come down here and dictate to us."

Eastern Network Hinted

New York, Nov. 18 (AP).—The New York Herald-Tribune says the National Power Policy Committee, aiming to strengthen the Federal Government's stake in electric power, is understood to be ready to set forth an extensive program which would involve early development of the St. Lawrence waterway and coordination of public and private utility facilities by means of a transmission network throughout the Eastern States.

The newspaper says it is reported that private utility leaders will be summoned to a conference with the committee early next month to discuss adequacy of the present power supply to meet a war-time emergency.

It suggested the St. Lawrence project would be harnessed to an Eastern network of transmission lines, which would tie in with the Tennessee Valley Authority and large private companies. The $500,000,000 network would link the following centers with a 250,000-volt cable: Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Chattanooga, St. Louis, Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland and Buffalo.

Midway of this itinerary, Betty Bobe, blonde freshman from Ashland, Ky., blurted out: "I don't see how anybody could want to be a public enemy, after I've seen how these G-men operate!"

Ethel Huffman, of Kenwood, Md., brunet junior, came out of the FBI with the fervent conviction that "it's a man's job—and not a woman's!"

That impression did not particularly upset budding ambitions, because most of the girls haven't decided what they want to do after college. Some plan to go in for social work, but no confession of ambition to be an officer cropped up yesterday.

Catherine Silver, of Martinsburg, W. Va., red-haired senior who is majoring in history and who has done some work with a modern dance group, said she was interested in the death masks at the FBI.

Emma Louise Collins, of Parkersburg, W. Va., a chemistry major and business manager of The Old Maid, the humor magazine, was fascinated by the scientific research.

The Girls and their teacher, Paul N. Guthrie, heard M. B. Wilson, agent in the field force, describe some of the problems of the Bureau of Narcotics.

From the Bureau, the group went to the National Training School for girls.

Conserving Soil Basis of 1940 Farm Program

AAA Shifts Emphasis From Crop Control to Preventing Erosion

By the Associated Press

The Agriculture Department is revamping its farm-aid program for 1940 to shift emphasis from crop production control to protection of the soil from wind and water erosion.

Under tentative regulations drafted by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, farmers will be asked to increase attention and efforts for conservation if they want to share in $775,000,000 in benefit payments.

Farmers will have to do more than plant within acreage allotments for such major crops as cotton, wheat, corn, tobacco, potatoes and peanuts, in order to obtain the maximum amounts of subsidies.

They will be asked to increase plantings of legumes and other soil-building crops, to return more land to grass and pastures, particularly land subject to erosion and unsuited for cultivation. Special efforts will be made to prevent over-stocking and overgrazing of pasture land.

Other phases of the contemplated conservation program include:

Promotion of County agricultural planning committees to help farmers put their land to its "best use."

Organization of more soil conservation districts with power to build dams and other facilities to conserve water resources and to prevent dust storms and other forms of erosion.

Alteration of policies of the Farm Credit Administration to deny credit on land deemed unsuited for crops.

A sharp increase in projects demonstrating contour farming and terracing.

An increase in subsidies to farmers starting woodlots.

Recommendations that Congress increase annual appropriations for governmental purchases of submarginal land.

Dewey's Political Fate Hinges On Two Vital Decisions

Prosecutor Must Choose Whether He'll Be Labeled a Conservative or Liberal And What to Do About 1940 Race

By W. B. Ragsdale,
Associated Press Staff Writer

Thomas E. Dewey has two decisions on the fire.

They will come pretty close to determining whether he will follow most other noted prosecuting attorneys into political oblivion or scale the political heights.

He has to decide, first, how much of the New Deal he is willing to go along with. By this, he will acquire either a liberal or a conservative label. But the trouble with these labels is that no two persons can agree on what they mean.

And some time before next July, he has to begin figuring how much powder he will put behind his shot at the Presidency in 1940. It may easily work out that 1944 will appear to be a better year for oomph.

Some of his New York friends already have been asking him jocularly when he was going to decide whether he was a liberal or a conservative. One, reminding him of a survey which said 60 per cent of the people thought he was liberal and 40 per cent thought him conservative, said with a twinkle in his eye:

Now Dewey's Fate

"You can't declare yourself now, Tom. If you go one way, you will lost the 60 per cent and if you go the other, you will lose the 40. The division is too close.

It is not entirely Dewey's fault, however, that he has not expounded his views before this. Plans for an invasion of the Middle West had been made months ago but they were tabled by the outbreak of war in Europe and the semblance of a political armistice during the debate over repealing the arms embargo.

But even if there had been no talk of a political truce, Dewey would have held back until the embargo debate was finished. He had a feeling that there was no point in talking in a boiler factory. The front pages and the air waves were filled with words about embargo. It would have been a waste of energy to try to crash in.

What Dewey is likely to find in the Middle West is that the men who pay the way for the party have been fairly well sold on other candidates. His own strength seems to lie among a minority of young Republicans in most of the States between the Alleghenies and the Rockies.

There the tendency is to lay stress upon the need for a Republican candidate with a background of experience in national affairs.

May Be Reconciled

If Dewey finds that this is the dominant sentiment, he might return to New York reconciled to the abandonment of any thought of attaining the Presidency in 1940.

But, if his hope of attaining the 1940 nomination were withdrawn from him, he would be left the choice between two possible roads to the 1944 nomination. One would be to aim for the Vice Presidential nomination on the 1940 ticket, the other to try again for the governorship of New York which he failed by so narrow a margin to win in 1938.

A governorship—and particularly the New York governorship—is the modern stepping stone to the presidential nomination. And, coincidentally, Dewey's term as district attorney expires at the same time as does that of the New York Governor.

Norris Foresees More Taxes, Larger Deficit

Nebraskan Thinks Debt Will Go Beyond Limit Of $45,000,000,000

Senator Norris (Independent), of Nebraska, put on a pair of very dark glasses yesterday and foresaw increased Federal taxes and a deficit greater than the $45,000,000,000 national debt limit.

He saw this gloomy immediate future despite his belief that the United States will not become involved in the European war. He is opposed to increased expenditures for national defense.

"We have more pressing problems than the one of whether we will get into the war," Norris said in an interview.

"Unemployment is first, agriculture relief second . . . or maybe its the other way around. At any rate, the problem of the relief of our people is a continuing and growing one."

Praises Neutrality Law

He had no comment to make on the Administration's secret plan to avert increasing the debt limit by having Federal lending agencies increase borrowings.

The only 1917 Senator still in office who voted against the United States' entry in the World War, the Nebraskan said he believed the new neutrality legislation made it less likely than ever that this country would get into the war.

"I never have thought there was any probability of us getting into the war, but the new law is even more of a safeguard," he said.

"On the basis of what we know now, I am against any expansion of our national defense budget. The best defense against trouble in this country is a satisfied people, and we've got to do something about feeding them and taking care of them.

"I think there has been a little employment gain due to the war, but not a great deal. At all costs we must avoid a boom. The effect of a boom would be to leave us worse off than we are now. In fact, I think world conditions point to nothing but worse conditions everywhere—in every community—later on.

Suffering With Cold

"On top of unemployment, the farmers of a great part of the country have been hit by the worst drought in years, and farmers in some sections, like Mississippi, have seen their crops drowned out.

"And it doesn't make an difference why so many of our people are in need, whether it's their fault or someone else's, they've got to be taken care of."

The Senator, who has so severe a cold that he dare not risk a trip home, is sympathetic with those who think now is the time to curtail Federal spending, but he believes their desires are impractical today.

"I know some Congressmen are campaigning on a campaign of less spending, but they're not looking at the facts," he said.

Safety Chief Quaffs Drink As 'Martyr'

Gary Attorney Makes 'Drunkometer' Test In 'Interest of Science'

By the Associated Press

Gary, Ind., Nov. 18.—Gary Safety Council President Richard S. Kaplan decided he was a "martyr" in the cause of safety today after he downed four ounces of 2-year-old bourbon whisky in an experiment to establish the "drunkometer's" value in drunken driving and intoxication prosecutions.

The test resulted from an argument between Kaplan, an attorney and City Judge William Fletcher, with Kaplan and police supporting the "drunkometer." Judge Fletcher accepts "drunkometer" findings, backed by corroborative evidence, in drunken driving cases, but does not recognize the device's showing in intoxication cases.

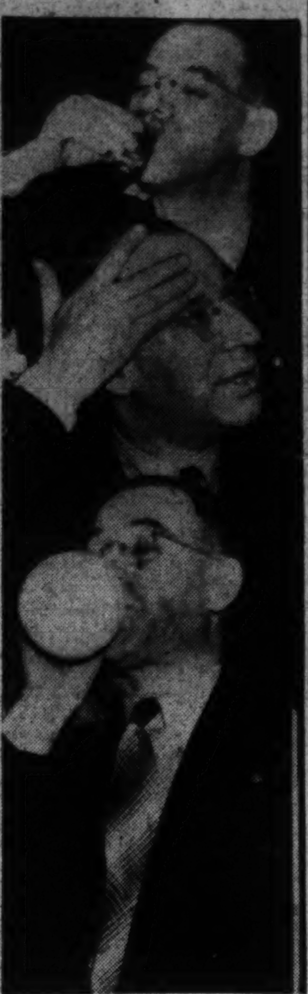
Kaplan put four drinks under his belt and then waited an hour before blowing his breath into the "drunkometer" balloon. Analysis of his breath showed .164 of 1 per cent of alcohol in his blood. Under Indiana law, an alcohol count of .15 of 1 per cent indicates intoxication.

"This test," Kaplan said after the finding was announced, "has been conducted for scientific purposes only.

"I'm not a drunkard and I don't drink. I ought to go down in history as a martyr."

Judge Fletcher had no comment to assertions of safety council representatives that, as a result of the test, they would insist the courts recognize the value of the "drunkometer."

'Safety Martyr' Takes Drunk Test



Associated Press WIREPHOTO

To settle a legal dispute over the question, "When is a man drunk?" and to test the accuracy of the "drunkometer," Richard S. Kaplan, president of the Gary, Ind., Safety Council, drank four ounces of whisky yesterday and promptly branded himself a "martyr for safety."

Funds Sought For War Relief

The Golden Rule Foundation yesterday appealed for contributions from "all Americans enjoying ample harvests and adequate incomes, some of which may trace to the wars in Europe and Asia." Funds are to relieve victims of any war, officials said.

Dr. Garnett Given Degree by U. of Edinburgh

George Washington University yesterday announced that Dr. Christopher Browne Garnett, associate professor of philosophy, has received the degree of doctor of letters from the University of Edinburgh. The award is in recognition of his book, "The Kantian Philosophy of Space," published last spring under a grant by the American Council of Learned Societies.

The degree, as bestowed by British universities, is conferred only on the basis of a published work which is recognized as an original contribution in a field of learning. Dr. Garnett, in his early 30's, is one of the youngest to be so honored.

A member of the G. W. U. faculty since 1931, Dr. Garnett is a graduate of Western High School

Italian Radio Warns Soviet On the Balkans

For instance, some days ago, the same broadcaster said "as the British frontier is on the Rhine, so the Italian frontier is on the Danube." But those words did not appear in Italian newspapers until today in a dispatch from Ankara quoting a Turkish newspaper.

This difference between semiofficial broadcasts and official silence indicates that the Government has not decided the line it will take if or when the Russians enter the Balkans.

Premier Mussolini claimed a resounding victory for Fascist philosophy today in addressing the supreme commission for autarchy. He said that the war economy is normal and that the Italians had been right in adopting it for their mode of living.

This is the fourth anniversary of the imposition of sanctions against Italy during the Ethiopian war which led the country into a program of self-sufficiency. Now, the whole world has had to follow a similar line, said the Duce.

Duce Cites Economic War

Mussolini claimed credit in his address for preventing the spread of war to the entire European continent, but so far as its economic effects are concerned, he claimed that it is a world-wide struggle.

"Now above all, everyone, even those with the thickest brains, can see that the division between the economy of peace and the economy of war is simply absurd," continued Il Duce. "There is not an economy for peace time and an economy for war time.

"There is only a war economy, because historically, considering the number of years of war, it has been demonstrated that a state of warfare is a normal state of the people . . . because even in years of so-called peace, other types of war are waged, which in their turn prepare for armed warfare."

The meeting ended with a resolution reaffirming the unshakable decision to reach in all fields the ultimate goal indicated by Mussolini, and called upon all Italians to "use their will, genius and work" for a continuation of the self-sufficiency battle until victory.

Army Kept On Alert

Rome, Nov. 18 (AP).—An Italian army of approximately a million and a half men was kept under arms today by government degree.

The decree, published in the official Journal, authorized the maintenance in active service of four reservist classes called up in August for 10 weeks training.

Soviet to Build Up Air Force

Moscow, Nov. 18 (U.P.).—Soviet aviation officials declared tonight the Russian air force will be strengthened because the British and French "imperialists have started a second imperialistic war" and are trying to draw the Soviets into the conflict.

140 Lost as Mine Sinks Dutch Ship

jumped overboard into the open sea as the Simon Bolivar slid beneath the surface within a few minutes after colliding with the mine.

The ship was due to discharge her passengers at several West Indian ports before proceeding to New York, where she had been scheduled to go into the United States-West Indian passenger service next month. The Royal Netherlands Steamship Co. had planned to keep the Simon Bolivar on that run for the duration of the war.

The tragedy would have been far greater but for the fact that British naval patrol ships happened to be near the scene and, responding to an S O S, were able to pick up survivors.

As the Simon Bolivar, following a normal steamer lane at the northern entrance of the English Channel, collided with the mine, there was just barely time to launch lifeboats.

Women leaped into the sea clutching their children and swam around until they were picked up. Men performed feats of heroism in keeping women and children afloat until rescue could reach them. Some lost their lives in making rescues, it was indicated by stories told by survivors.

The British admiralty in a communique charged that the mine was one of a number allegedly "laid without notification" in the channel for the purpose of "destroying" merchant shipping, neutral as well as British. It said the Simon Bolivar catastrophe illustrates Germany's alleged "utter disregard for international law and the dictates of humanity."

["I want to stress," he said, "that in the circumstances under which the ship was sunk, it could not have been a German mine which the Simon Bolivar hit.

Heart-rending scenes were enacted at a London railway station as survivors from the ship began arriving from the coast at midnight.

Many of them were wrapped in blankets and were carrying scraps of their belongings. Scores of policemen met the survivors and led them by the light of hurricane lamps through the blacked-out station to ambulances where nurses and doctors immediately attended to those suffering from injuries.

One of the survivors said in broken English:

"After the explosion many of us jumped into the water. We had no time to gather our belongings. It was nerve racking."

A young child, being taken off to a London Hospital, cried:

"Where is my daddy?"

Steward J. H. Writers said Capt. Voorspuil was killed instantly in the first explosion which seemed to have occurred immediately underneath him.

Wristers said "all the oil pipes burst and the people in the cabins were smothered. Some lifeboats could not be lowered properly and others were affected by the second explosion, which came within 15 minutes. I saw about 80 people in the oil-covered sea.

"The wireless apparatus was smashed. We were almost stationary and in shallow water when the explosion occurred. Even when the boat went down her upper structure was still above the water."

War Spreads to East

By the Associated Press

War at sea spread into the Indian Ocean in the past week, threatening Great Britain's vitval "lifeline" to her colonies, as the eleventh week of the European conflict came to an end with 13 more ships added to the ever-growing casualty list.

Great Britain suffered the greatest, but both Germany and neutral nations also counted losses—a total since the war began of 128 ships, with a tonnage of 514,690, including the Dutch liner Simon Bolivar.

U. S. Army '1,000%' Ready For Defense Asked by Woodring

Protection of West To Require Strength, Secretary Explains

By John G. Norris.

SECRETARY WOODRING

Secretary of War Woodring yesterday declared the United States must have a "perfect" army, fully equipped and trained and adequate in size to defend the Western Hemisphere from attack.

"We can't have a skeleton army as we have had for several years, with motorization at say 50 per cent of requirements, modern armament at 33 1-3, and modern anti-aircraft at 20 per cent," he said in an interview.

"The time has come that whatever size army is agreed on—and I don't think size is of first importance—we must have a force that is 1,000 per cent perfect."

The War Secretary said the United States must be prepared to defend the entire American Hemisphere, not for political reasons but purely as a protective measure for our own shores.

Modern bombing planes, capable of crossing the Atlantic and establishing bases in South America from which they could strike at the Panama Canal, have forced this conclusion, Woodring said. A menace to the Canal is a threat to the 48 States, he maintained.

"I'm not willing to have it said that we are going into a policy of defending the Western Hemisphere because of political or imperialistic considerations, or to strengthen the Monroe Doctrine," he explained.

"We've gone into this policy for purely military reasons."

Woodring said that at the next session of Congress he would insist that the American people fully understand these ideas as the basis of the Nation's national defense policy.

Only with such a completely equipped and trained army, the Cabinet officer said, will the United States possess a real force, able to carry out its mission.

Training, he said, means mass maneuvers in divisions and corps such are now beginning in the South and Northwest and not the scattered infrequent maneuvers of recent years. Five infantry and one cavalry divisions are now concentrated for intensive training, which will culminate with four of the infantry units holding the first peacetime corps exercises ever attempted in the United States.

Secretary Woodring did not go into the specific requests to be made of Congress in money and men, except to say they would be "sound and honest." Officials have informally indicated, however, that they believe the Regular Army should be increased from its present goal of 227,000 men to 280,000 the peace-time limit, and that the National Guard should be enlarged from a projected strength of 235,000 to 320,000. This would give the Nation an initial protective force of 600,000.

It is expected the War Department will recommend such a figure but, as indicated by Woodring, leave the actual numerical strength to Congress after strongly recommending that whatever force is authorized, it be completely equipped and trained.

At the last session, Congress voted $110,000,000 to purchase tanks, anti-aircraft guns, gas masks, anti-tank weapons, semi-automatic rifles, and so on to equip an initial protective force of 400,000 men. Some of the equipment already was on hand. Weapons and equipment for an additional 200,000 therefore would not be costly, it is pointed out.

Whatever size force is approved, the War Department will ask that continuous division and corps maneuvers be authorized, so that when the 65,000 troops now concentrated become letter-perfect in battle drills, others will take their places, until the entire army has been whipped into an efficient fighting unit, ready for instant action.

Prague Under Martial Law, Hacha Urges Czechs to Submit

land, which should be a lesson to them, Hacha said.

They will not be drawn into this war as they were under the Austro-Hungarian empire, he stated, but can pursue their peaceful activities, having perhaps in many things as advantageous a position as a neutral people.

The Czech President urged the population to refrain from any and all disturbances. Failure to do so could result in "unpredictable disadvantages" for individuals as well as for the entire people, he asserted.

Further sacrifices would be senseless, Hacha concluded, and the population should not let itself be misled.

What martial law means in the protectorate is not yet clear. It is thought, however, to mean the erection of special courts to try quickly those accused of serious offenses. Although black-shirted German elite guards—three regiments of which marched in Friday—were plainly in evidence in the city tonight, outwardly everything was tensely quiet.

The background of the present disturbance, in the absence of any official explanation, including all the events known to have taken place, remains obscured for the moment.

On the night from Thursday to Friday, however, German Elite Guard troops, apparently acting on suspicion that the demonstrations which began October 28, "Czech Independence Day," were not spontaneous and an underground anti-German movement amongst student groups was at work, decided on a general round-up of students.

Press Reported Seized

Elite Guards with machine guns were deployed throughout the student quarter. The buildings of the Svehla Institute, Masaryk College, and Hlava College, which were barricaded by the students, were then stormed amid the continued firing of German machine guns while towards morning all student homes were occupied by the Germans.

At Svehla Institute, Elite Guards were variously rumored to have discovered a secret press for the printing of anti-German propaganda, and a secret radio station in the process of broadcasting. Here they were reported to have arrested eight students and one professor, all of whom are still reported missing. Whether these are the nine officially reported executed yesterday is unknown.

In the early morning hours the Masaryk College was stormed and some students, allegedly still in their night clothes, endeavored to flee amid the fire of the German machine guns. Some of the students succeeded in reaching a Yugoslav student home where they were later arrested by the Germans, but according to reports not until the Yugoslav students had also participated in the fighting on the side of the Czechs.

Many students are still missing, and in the absence of a complete official list of casualties it is unknown whether any students or others were killed, or how many were wounded. That some were wounded at least seems probable, however, in view of the serious nature of the fighting, as well as the amount of machine gun firing.

Busloads of students were arrested, however, and carted away to neighboring suburbs. The total number arrested is estimated to have been some 2,000 of whom less than 1,000 were later released.

The names of two prominent members of the Czech Unity Party were stricken from the list of the party today. Dr. Josef Matunschek, who was head of the committee of understanding between the Germans and the Czechs, as well as Dr. Klima, leader of student affairs, were both stricken from the party rolls, and are reported missing.

Parents and relatives of the boys studying in the protectorate's capital began arriving today to find out the fate of their sons and relations. From Brunn anti-German demonstrations also were reported.

The general hospital here, meanwhile, is closed to all the curious. Only persons bearing special permission may enter, for here evidently the victims of machine gun fire, as well as the general fighting have been brought.

Hacha made his speech today from his palace, where he has been "confined with a slight illness."

Treason Statute Invoked

(The Berlin newspaper, Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung, announced further that the German law against treason had been imposed on the whole Bohemia-Moravia protectorate, of which Prague is the leading city, widening the powers of the Nazi authorities.

(The law makes crimes of many acts not punishable under the old Czech law and provides serious penalties. The death sentence is applicable in extreme cases.)

(In Berlin, the authoritative commentary Dienst aus Deutschland asserted measures to keep order in the protectorate had the approval of "the whole Czech people, which desires to be protected against excesses of the youthful element.")

Nazis Decree 10-Hour Day At 8-Hour Pay

Labor Chief Defines German Goal as End Of British Money Bags

Copyright by New York Times

Berlin, Nov. 18.—The eight-hour day is to be changed into a ten-hour day without additional compensation.

Some allowances will be made, however, in taxes, while should an 11 or 12-hour working day be required in exceptional cases, compensation must be made.

This announcement was made today by Robert Ley, head of the German labor front. Vacations will be restored after the first of the year, he added, and Christmas bonuses will be paid, but under special regulations.

Ley issued a proclamation in the form of "a balance sheet" and said that the "greatest thing on the credit side of this balance sheet is the fact that the Fuehrer still lives!"

Blast at Britain

The German goal, according to the labor front head, was "victory, victory and still again victory and therewith the complete destruction of England and of the domination of her money bags over the rest of the people on the globe. Socialism against capitalism! That is our battle cry."

Germany was never in such good shape, Ley concluded, and Britain never in such poor shape.

"This time," he said, "we will get them! England will be beaten and you and Germany will become free! Work against the money bags! Freedom for us!"

Fuehrer Hitler today issued a proclamation to the farmers thanking them in the name of the German people for having brought in the year's harvest and for having done the necessary sowing "in spite of bad weather and a shortage of labor."

Those tasks, he declared "are of decisive importance in this war which has been forced upon us."

Beet Harvest Good

Germany announces another victory on the home front. The root crop harvest, including potatoes, sugar beets and fodder beets, is said to be "extraordinarily successful and assures a satisfactory supply throughout the winter."

The potato crop, it is announced, will total 56,300,000 tons—that is to say, as much as last year's excellent harvest, in spite of the fact that this year the area planted was smaller by 3½ per cent. The sugar beet crop reached a record high with 17,400,000 tons, as against 17,200,000 last year. Fodder beets totaled 39,500,000 tons, which is a bit less than the previous season.

Guatemala Parley Urges Trade Gain

Guatemala City, Nov. 18 (AP)—Five recommendations laying groundwork for a broad expansion of inter-American industry and trade were adopted unanimously today by a plenary session of the Pan-American Treasury Conference.

The recommendations urged establishment of a central bank to facilitate quoting, buying and selling of American currencies; tightening of control of smuggling; unification of customs procedure; unification of government statistics and exchange of government fiscal information.

A formal proposal was made to hold the next conference in Washington.

Italy and Spain Believed To Have Saved Low Countries

Joint Plea Reported Made to Nazis on Low Countries' Behalf

Copyright by New York Times.

Paris, Nov. 18.—Messages from Madrid confirm stories published in Brussels that the Spanish and the Italian governments jointly interceded with Fuehrer Hitler through their diplomatic representatives against any infringement of the neutrality of Holland or Belgium

This confirmation is not official, but neither is the report denied, and inquirers are left with the clear impression that it will be confirmed later.

Here is regarded as important and significant that these two nonbelligerent countries should have taken the action reported in defense of the neutrality of other nonbelligerents.

There seems now no doubt that these protests, coupled with the firm attitude of King Leopold and Queen Wilhelmina and their preparedness for war, has altered the whole German plan which was, it is believed, for an attack through Belgium about November 12.

Belgian court circles tonight said the reputed intervention of Mussolini on behalf of Belgium was prompted by a personal appeal from the Princess of Piedmont, only sister of King Leopold and wife of Crown Prince Humberto of Italy.

Low Countries Protest Again

Amsterdam, Nov. 18 (INS).—The Netherlands and Belgium took fresh diplomatic action tonight to preserve their menaced neutrality.

Simultaneously, reports were current that a new Dutch-Belgian effort, with Premier Mussolini's help if not participation, soon may be launched to bring about neutral mediation and end the European war.

The series of recent belligerent airplane flights over the neutral lowland countries assumed a more serious aspect today when a Dutch army plane was compelled to open fire on three German flying boats near Vlieland Island off Holland's northern coast.

One of the German planes engaged in a brief duel with the Dutch craft, before following the other two German planes in fleeing beyond the North Sea horizon.

The Dutch government promptly dispatched to Berlin a sharp protest against this latest violation of neutrality.

Italian Envoy Visits Both

This coincided with instructions sent from Brussels to the Belgian ambassadors in Berlin, London and Paris to lodge with the belligerent governments the most energetic protests yet made against repeated infringements of Belgium's neutral skies by war planes from Germany, Britain and France.

Court circles in Belgium said last night that the reported intervention of Premier Mussolini of Italy on behalf of Belgium was prompted by a personal appeal from the Princess of Piedmont (above), only sister of King Leopold of the Belgians and wife of Prince Humberto of Piedmont

One British plane made a forced landing on Belgian soil and its crew of three was interned yesterday, while three German planes drew Belgian antiaircraft fire as they passed over the Ghent district.

With the neutrality of the low countries thus being increasingly endangered, their stake in the question of restoring peace obviously was a heavy one.

In this respect, Amsterdam's foreign circles assumed keen interest in visits being made to The Hague and Brussels by Raffaele Guariglia, Italian ambassador to France.

Duce May Take a Hand

There was lively speculation as to whether these visits denoted active participation by Mussolini in endeavors to restore peace, a drive which has entered a new stage with the unfavorable replies made by Britain, France and Germany to the mediation proposal of King Leopold and Queen Wilhelmina.

It was the general impression that Hitler, might not be averse to some face-saving formula that would hold the promise of terminating the conflict without entailing a serious retreat by Germany.

Tending to strengthen this impression is the continued delay of any large-scale military action by either side. Germany's internal difficulties with the Czechs and other sections of the populace—troubles that appear to have been traced largely to Communists—is said to be a contributing factor to the German hesitation to strike the first big blow.

Roosevelt Aide Rebukes Rossi on Strike Message

Hyde Park, N. Y., Nov. 18 (U.P.).—White House officials tonight indirectly criticized the manner of an appeal by Mayor Rossi, of San Francisco, to President Roosevelt for Federal intervention in the San Francisco waterfront strike.

The appeal, telegraphed to Mr. Roosevelt by Mayor Rossi, asserted that his city is "sick and tired" of Harry Bridges, Australian-born C. I. O. leader of the West Coast. William D. Hasset, of the President's staff, said that the White House never comments on telegrams whose contents are made public before they are received by the President.

Hasset said the message was not received by Mr. Roosevelt until this forenoon, a circumstance which obviously precipitated the indirect White House rebuke of Rossi.

Nazis Beat Off Air Raid

Copyright by New York Times

Berlin, Nov. 18.—The German high command admitted today that three British planes attempted yesterday to attack Wilhelmshaven, the Reich's largest naval base on the North Sea.

As the enemy planes reached the city, however, they were driven away by antiaircraft fire without dropping any bombs. German pursuit planes were unable to engage the English, it was announced.

(The British air ministry reported last night that Royal Air Force planes successfully photographed "an important German naval base" though they encountered heavy antiaircraft fire.)

French Claim Plane

German airplanes, meanwhile, were reported by the high command to have made observation flights over all of France, and a French communique said Nazi planes had flown over French territory and that one had been forced down and the crew captured.

All sections between the Moselle and Rhine rivers, were said to have been subjected to occasional artillery fire. On the upper Rhine, except for enemy machine gun fire on the German shore of the river at Breisach, complete quiet was reported. East of the Moselle, the French were stated to have been observed digging in.

Nazi sources said Allied artillery had directed powerful bombardments at German fortifications and that one fort was hit by 70 or 80 French shells without suffering more than minor damage.

Propaganda Charged

"They stood the test without interrupting work of construction and without any important damage," it was asserted. Nazis said the shelling permitted an important test of the fortifications.

British and French propaganda, it is claimed here, minimizes the successes of the German air force in order to pacify the French and English populations who are constantly subjected to air-raid alarms. In addition, it is asserted that the English and French hope thereby to damage Germany's constantly increasing business in airplanes with neutral lands by suggesting that the German planes are unable to operate successfully in bad weather conditions.

Although the official high command communique makes no mention of any German air activity over the British Isles yesterday, semiofficial news agency reports, intended only for foreign consumption, declare German scouting planes yesterday cruised over France as far as Bordeaux and over the north of England past the Shetland and Orkney Islands. Some of these observation flights, over 1,200 miles long, were made in spite of the heavy rain and a strong wind, it was claimed.

Nazi Planes Scour France; One Downed

Flights Reported in Northern, Central and Southwestern Areas

By International News Service

Paris, Nov. 18.—German warplanes today made long flights over French territory, including several large cities and towns, but antiaircraft and pursuit fighting ships forced one down on French soil and drove others away.

No bombings were reported anywhere in France. Air raid alarms, however, were sounded early in the day in Lille and other northern French towns.

Alarms were sounded again just before darkness in many towns and villages in central France, it was announced in Paris. The all clear signal finally came a full hour after the sirens screamed their first warnings at 6:20 p. m. (12:20 p. m., E. S. T.).

The German plane which was forced down landed in the Vosges River valley absolutely undamaged, it was announced. The Nazi crew was taken prisoners.

Air Warning in England

[An air raid warning sounded tonight on the Essex coast and farther inland in southeast England, the all clear signal following within 30 minutes, the Associated Press reported. The air ministry announced the alarm was caused by appearance of an unidentified aircraft. Editor's note.]

One of yesterday's German flights over French territory, it was learned, penetrated to many towns in southwestern and central France on what apparently were reconnaissance missions. Air raid alarms lasted as long as 45 minutes in those areas and the flights were made despite restriction of visibility by bad weather.

Conscript Class Called

Paris, Nov. 18 (AP).—The first section of the 1939 class of conscripts was ordered today to report November 27 for the regular two years of military service.

The French general staff meanwhile increased activity on the Western Front, its evening communique saying: "Patrol and artillery activity on various parts of the front."

The morning communique had told of a quiet night in all sectors.

Eduard Benes Still Confident

Copyright, 1939, by New York Tribune, Inc.

London, Nov. 18.—Eduard Benes, former president of Czecho-Slovakia, and Jan Masaryk, former Czech minister at London, asserted today that eventually the Czechs and Slovaks would throw off the Nazi yoke.

Masaryk, son of the founder of the Czech republic, said that the events of the last few days in Prague and other Czecho-Slovak centers did not constitute a large scale revolt against the Germans, which would be "premature and stupid at the present, as the time is not yet ripe." In the end, however, Masaryk predicted, "Hitler and his Nazis will disappear."

Benes contended that "it is only a question of time—and only a short time—when Czecho-Slovakia will also be free politically and internationally," the country's morale and spiritual freedom having been proved by the events of the last few days.

Benes said that the reign of terror in Czecho-Slovakia was becoming more brutal as the internal situation in Germany deteriorated.

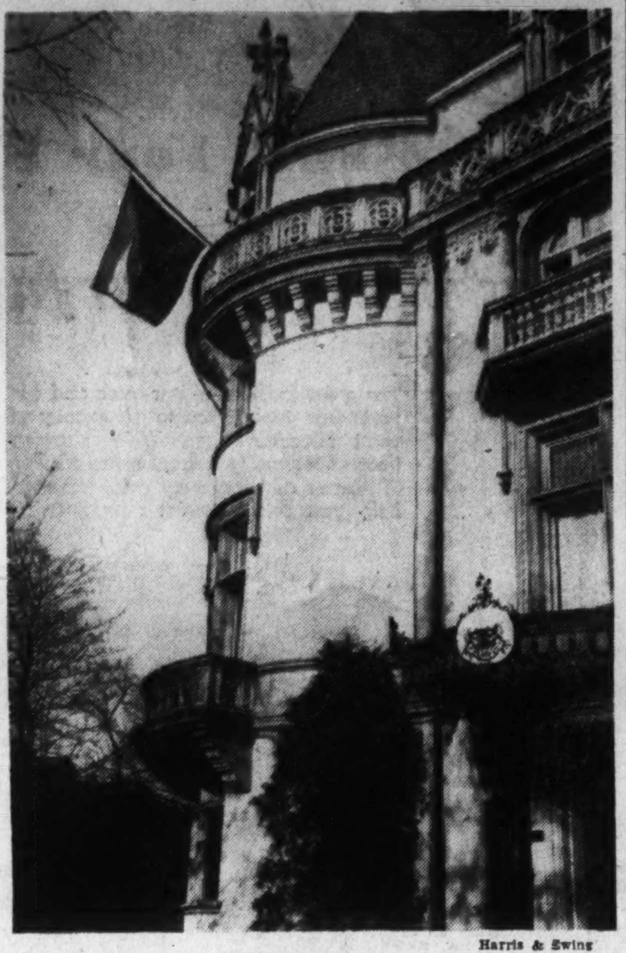
"Brutal Assassination"

"What happened yesterday in Prague," Benes' statement added, "and what is supposed to be retaliation for the celebration of the Czech independence day (October 28), is simply brutal assassination . . . It is assassination which strangely reminds us of the acts which happened in occupied Belgium in the last war."

Masaryk said he had received through private sources a document smuggled out of Prague which purported to disclose plans of the Gestapo (German secret police) "to kill the soul of the Czech people." He said the secret police in the protectorates were urged to use "whatever means necessary" in breaking up groups of Czechs found talking in the streets or in cafes."

He said that the least hint of revolt against the Nazi regime resulted in the brutal treatment of thousands of Czechs. "But the spirit of the people will not be crushed," he said. "They are waiting their time. The Gestapo will never defeat them."

Czech Flag at Half-Staff Here For Students Shot by Germans



Harris & Ewing

The Czecho-Slovak Legation here flies its flag at half staff in mourning for the students who were executed in Prague by German authorities. In Berlin a high official said that while the executions "may seem harsh," they were necessary because Germany was at war and "cannot allow the Czech people to be contaminated by a few hotheads"

Minister Hurban Holds Them Martyrs But Says Time Is Not Ripe Yet for Uprisings Such as That at Prague

Nine Czech students who cannot be honored in Prague were saluted as martyrs yesterday on Washington's Massachusetts avenue.

Execution of the youthful patriots by Nazi police was mourned at the Czech Legation here, where the colors of the conquered republic hung all day at half-staff.

Foreign missions rarely display their flags at the death of private citizens, but Minister Vladimir Hurban believes "these students are not longer private persons."

"They are the embodiment of our will to independence," he declared. "They are martyrs to our cause."

Holds Time "Not Ripe"

Col. Hurban, while praising the courage of students who carried out a public demonstration for Czech liberty, insisted that responsible Czech leaders are discouraging all such displays of national feeling.

"The time is not ripe," he said. "But it surely will be another day. There can be no question of that."

Germany is determined to carry out "a cultural annihilation of Czech-Slovakia, the diplomat asserted. "Closing all our universities for three years—can you imagine what that means? This is the most bestial invention the Nazis have yet brought forward. The aim is the death of education in Czecho-Slovakia."

"Todesraum" For Others

"Hitler claimed that under his protection nations could develop freely according to their personalities," Col. Hurban recalled with bitterness. "That was a common lie, like everything else Hitler says."

"Arbitrary execution" of the nine youths is proof, he charged, that "lebensraum (living space for Nazi Germany means todesraum (space for death) for the rest of the world."

"The German way of thinking is hard for a decent man to understand," he said.

French Place Merchant Shipping Under British

goods are ready for delivery, instead of using British ships to transport British purchases and French ships for French purchases, French and British merchant ships will be used, according to their availability and capacities.

In many instances, too, it is hoped to make use of neutral shipping, recently depleted by disappearance of United States shipping from the war area. Many neutral countries are taking steps to increase their merchant fleets, hoping to get orders which the necessity of using immensely costly convoys makes it impractical for ships of the belligerent nations to accept.

Premier Daladier today gave his cabinet further details on how the agreement reached by the supreme interallied council will work.

Other Nations to Follow

It was not until after three years of war that the Allies in 1917 reached the point of pooling their resources, which they have reached this time in less than three months. It is understood the French took the initiative in insisting that there must be no competitive purchases abroad. For the first time in history there is a real and complete cooperation, in all domains, between the two countries which have been rivals since fall of the Roman Empire.

Among neutral countries, it is believed the example will find immediate imitators, for the advantages in the economy of transport alone are so great that they cannot be disregarded. If two countries with such extensive and intricate commercial dealings as France and Great Britain can coordinate their trade, it is possible others will attempt to do the same.

Cost of Living Rises

Copyright by New York Times

London, Nov. 18.—The considerable increase in the cost of living in the first month of the war has been followed by a similar jump in the second month. Since the war began the cost of living index has risen in Great Britain by 14 points, or 8.75 per cent. This has just been announced by the Ministry of Labor.

The statement showed that the increase in October was 4 points or 2½ per cent, being 69 per cent above the basic level of July, 1914.

More than one and a half points in the increase since outbreak of the war was attributed to the increase in the tax on sugar. For food alone, the index figure November 1 was 54 per cent above the level of July, 1914, showing a rise of 2½ per cent since September 30.

Sans Mustaches, French May Drop Name 'Poilu'

Copyright, 1939, by New York Tribune, Inc.

Paris, Nov. 18.—Veterans of the World War who have visited the French army zone recently report that the mustache, so common in the ranks from 1914 to 1918, is rare in the French army of 1939.

What is in fashion today is a sort of beard, called a "Collier de Barbe," which extends from one ear to the other by way of the chin.

One Frenchman who served in the World War says the change in style has about driven the word "Poilu" from the soldier's vocabulary. "Poilu," the French word for "hairy," in the World War was used to designate any French soldier, because every one wore a mustache and sometimes went unshaven for long periods.

Nazi Airmen Are Held

Udine, Italy, Nov. 18 (AP).—Lost over the frontier in a fog, a crew of four bailed out of a German military plane today when their craft became disabled. Hours later, militiamen still were searching for two of them.

Far East Faces Long War, Says General

U. S.-Trained Chinese Bares Death Toll Of Millions in Fighting

By Hanson W. Baldwin,
Copyright by New York Times

New York, Nov. 18.—Although China has suffered huge casualties in more than two years of warfare with Japan, the Chinese are capable of indefinitely prolonged resistance, and the Sino-Japanese war is likely to last longer than the war in Europe, Lieut. Gen. Wen Ying-hsing, commander of China's revenue guards, said this week.

Gen. Wen, first Chinese graduate of West Point and one of the first Chinese "rats" (freshman) ever to attend the Virginia Military Institute, is making a brief tour of the United States. He expects to return next month to Chungking, wartime capital of China's Nationalist government, headed by Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek.

Gen. Wen, who was graduated from West Point in 1909 and has long filled civic and military or semi-military positions with the Chinese government, was interviewed, with the cooperation of the Chinese Consulate General here, at the Hotel Ambassador.

Gen. Wen made no attempt to discount the desperate nature of the conflict or the serious condition of China's finances, but predicted that China would ultimately win out by guerrilla and harassing tactics.

Because the Japanese have cut most of China's supply lines to the outside world, the Chinese troops and civilians have been forced to depend upon primitive or semi-primitive materials—such as flint-and-steel instead of matches—but China is still able to procure from the overland route from Russia or the land routes from Burma and French Indo-China rifles, some light machineguns and a few planes. In addition China has the facilities for manufacturing rifles and rifle ammunition.

As long as the troops can be equipped with rifles and light equipment China will be capable of protracted resistance, Gen. Wen said. There is no prospect that Japan can completely bottle up all the sources of arms supply, he added.

Gen. Wen made no attempt to estimate the Japanese casualties in the war, which started in July, 1937, but he said that about 2,000,000 Chinese soldiers had been killed or wounded, were missing or had deserted.

Despite these huge losses China maintains now and intends to continue to maintain 240 divisions at the front, in reserve or in training. Most of these divisions number from 8,000 to 10,000 men each, so that China has more than 2,000,000 troops, the general said.

South of the Great Wall Japan probably has about 38 divisions of 15,000 or more men each. The recent Japanese landing near Pahkoi, apparently intended as a threat to Nanking in Kwangsi province and to China's supply routes from French Indo-China, may have entailed the use of still additional troops. The Japanese, Gen. Wen estimated, will require at least nine divisions if they attempt to penetrate into the interior of Kwangsi province.

Gen. Wen said it had been estimated early in the war that one Japanese had been killed for every six Chinese. Now, with the Japanese communication lines extended far into the interior of the country (and with no considerable Japanese territorial gain registered in the past year of war), it is estimated that the ratio of losses is running about one Japanese killed to every 2.1 Chinese soldiers lost.

The general estimated that Japan was spending about 20,000,000 yen a day on the war and that China was spending 2,000,000. He made no effort to hide China's serious financial position; he admitted, in fact, that it might be worse than Japan's.

He said two big mistakes had been made—one by each side—at the beginning of the war. The first was the false Japanese assumption that China could be easily conquered, an assumption based on erroneous estimates of Chinese unity. The second was the false Chinese assumption that Japan would collapse economically under the strain of a protracted war.

Gen. Wen said Chniese unity and nationalism had been more firmly cemented than ever under the stress of war, and he indicated he saw no immediate likelihood of a Japanese economic collapse, so that no end to the Far Eastern war is apparently in sight.

U. S. Can Deliver Planes by Tractor

Copyright by New York Times

Ottawa, Ontario, Nov. 18.—Official comment here today on Washington reports that the new neutrality regulations of the United States would not permit American-made planes to be flown across the border for delivery to Canada was that tractors would be used to pull them across.

According to airmen here, there is an American airdrome in Montana whose location makes the use even of tractors unnecessary. The Montana field has been constructed bang up against the Canadian border and has been continue by Canadian authorities on the other side.

U. S. Catholics Praise Poles' Valiant Stand

Hierarchy, Clergy and People Are Honored as Champions of Cross

Praise for the hierarchy, clergy and people of Poland and the valor of the nation is set forth in an expression of sympathy adopted by the archbishops and bishops of the Catholic Church of this country who closed their annual meeting here yesterday.

In their statement the members of the American hierarchy referred to the Poles as "a noble Catholic people" and likened them to a "mighty champion who has stood at the outpost of Western Europe to witness and defend the cross."

Relief Committee Planned

The Most Rev. Hugh C. Boyle, of Pittsburgh, was named chairman of a bishops' committee for Polish relief.

Following the selection of the administrative board of the national Catholic Welfare Association, the archbishops and bishops elected the Most Rev. Samuel A. Stritch, Archbishop of Milwaukee, chairman of the board to succeed the Most Rev. Edward Mooney, Archbishop of Detroit.

Archbishop Mooney, who has been a member of the administrative board since 1934 and chairman since 1935, was ineligible for re-election because he held the office five consecutive terms.

Part of the statement expressing sympathy for Poland follows:

"The bishops of the United States, mindful of the staunch faith and blood-stained valor of the church in Poland, voice their brotherly compassion with the Polish hierarchy, its clergy and people in this, its hour of bitter sorrow.

Peterson Is Elected

"Like a mighty champion this noble Christian people has stood at the outpost of Christian Europe to witness and defend the cross. Only yesterday, amidst the mysterious changes of the times, the Cross in Poland seemed the bulwark of western Christian traditions against upsurging atheistic hordes. Like darkness came to Calvary, sorrow and suffering have settled on the church in Poland."

The Most Rev. John B. Peterson, Bishop of Manchester, N. H., was re-elected to the office of vice chairman of the conference. The Most Rev. John A. Duffy, Bishop of Buffalo, and the Most Rev. Francis C. Kelley, Bishop of Oklahoma City and Tulsa, were re-elected secretary and treasurer.

Other members of the new administrative board, in addition to Archbishop Stritch, are:

The Most Rev. Archbishops Joseph F. Rummel, of New Orleans; John Gregory Murray, of St. Paul;

The Most Rev. Bishops John Mark Gannon of Erie, and Edwin V. O'Hara of Kansas City.

The Bishops' Committees on Missions, the Census, the Confraternity of Christian Doctrine, Motion Pictures, Catholic Refugees, Propagation of the Faith, the National Organization for Decent Literature, and the North American College, were reelected. In the case of the Committee on the North American College, the Most Rev. Francis J. Spellman, archbishop of New York, was elected to membership, succeeding Bishop Peterson.

Chairmen Are Assigned

The administrative board assigned episcopal chairmen of the various departments of the National Catholic Welfare Conference as follows:

Archbishop Stritch, executive department; the Most Rev. Joseph F. Rummel, archbishop of New Orleans, department of lay organization; the Most Rev. John Gregory Murray, archbishop of St. Paul, department of Catholic action study; Bishop Peterson, department of education; the Most Rev. Edwin V. O'Hara, bishop of Kansas City, department of social action; the Most Rev. John Mark Gannon, bishop of Erie, press department, and assistant bishops were assigned to the various departments as follows:

The Most Rev. Batholomew J. Eustace, bishop of Camden, department of Catholic action study; the Most Rev. Walter A. Foery, bishop of Syracuse, legal department; the Most Rev. Karl J. Alter, Bishop of Toledo, and the Most Rev. Charles Hubert Le Blond, bishop of St. Joseph, department of social action; the Most Rev. Edward F. Hoban, bishop of Rockford, press department; the Most Rev. Francis P. Keough, bishop of Providence, department of education, and the Most Rev. Emmet M. Walsh, bishop of Charleston, department of lay organizaztions.

As assistant chairman of the department of social action, Bishop Alter was assigned to be counselor of the Conference of Diocesan Representatives for Hospitals.

Bishop Le Blond was named assistant bishop of the social action department representing the National Conference of Catholic Charities.

Troops Mass At Uzsok Pass In Carpathians

Hungarian, German And Soviet Soldiers Watch Each Other

By Sonia Tomara

Copyright, 1939, by New York Tribune, Inc.

Uzsok Pass, in the Carpathian Mountains, Nov. 18.—Fresh German divisions are being massed at this pass where the Hungarian, German and Soviet troops face each other, distrustful and apprehensive of the future.

While all is quiet, the Hungarians are mindful of each step of their neighbors. They fortify their side of the mountains, plant traps for tanks and fill barracks with soldiers.

The report is current in Budapest that the Germans have signed an alliance with Rumania, promising to defend its territory, minus Bessarabia. German engineers have already arrived at the River Prut, which was the Rumanian frontier with Russia before the war, and are beginning to build fortifications, presumably against the Russians, it was said in the Hungarian capital.

Transylvania Sore Spot

Incredible as such a report may appear, the Hungarians are afraid that with or against the Russians, the Germans might want to walk through Hungarian territory into Transylvania. Military men here say that they will defend Hungarian land against any invasion, whether from the German or the Russian side. They believe, however, that no action will begin before spring.

The plans of Germans and Russians are dark to Hungarian statesmen and military leaders, who look with suspicion at their neighbors and expect help only from Italy and perhaps Yugoslavia, the two countries interested in not letting Bolshevists or the Pan-Germanists spread toward the Adriatic.

Border Is Closed

The fact that the German-Hungarian frontier was closed two days ago to any visitors from Hungary and the report of arrival of more German troops make the Hungarians fear an action by Germany.

But the alarm is even greater about the Soviet plans for next spring. There is a widespread belief that the Soviet troops will invade Bukovina and Bessarabia.

Such a move, the Hungarians say, would bring the Soviets nearer to the Dardanelles, their ultimate goal. Although the Hungarians hate the Rumanians and wait for the moment to get Transylvania back, they fear any further expansion of the Soviet Union.

44 U. S. Ships Detained Since War Began

Officials Expect New Law to Decrease Searches Sharply

By the Associated Press

State Department officials disclosed yesterday that 44 American flag ships had been detained by belligerent nations since the outbreak of the war, but indicated they expected the number of such incidents to decrease sharply, because of the new neutrality law, with its prohibition against operation of United States merchant vessels in combat zones.

The State Department records for detention of ships between September 1 and November 17 showed that all had been released except one, which was picked up by the British Friday. Four of the ships detained for search for possible contraband were stopped twice, making a total of 48 cases.

The majority of the detentions—33—have been made by Great Britain. France made ten detentions, Germany four, and a belligerent vessel of unidentified nationality searched one ship.

British Detain Eight

[There have been only eight cases of interference with American shipping reported to the State Department since November 8. All detentions were by the British. The vessels stopped were:

[Four Waterman Steamship Corporation vessels—the Ipswich, Iberville, Gateway City and Wacosta—detained on the average about 13 days. All were bound for German ports.

[The American Export Lines vessels Exeter, Exminster and Express. These were detained only briefly. Approximately 700 bags of United States mail for Germany were taken fromthe Exeter at Gibraltar on November 6.

[The Tampa Interocean Steamship Co. vessel Lafcomo.

[Only the cargo of the Exminster escaped confiscation.—Editor's note.]

To date, there have been no formal claims for loss of cargo. Consequently, an accurate total on the amount of goods seized is lacking.

The United States recognizes the right of belligerents to search neutral ships to determine whether contraband is carried.

Henceforth a special passport will be required for each journey through the combat zone, Acting Secretary of State Welles announced yesterday.

This special approval may be given where "the public service requires" or "in cases of imperative necessity."

Those Shoes That Women Wear Irk Veteran Chiropodists

Two veteran chiropodists, having a reunion in Washington yesterday, were still puzzling over the question—how to make women wear sensible shoes?

"If movie stars would only wear on the screen the sensible shoes that they wear in their private lives," a great reform would be put afoot, sighed Dr. M. S. Harmolin, of Cleveland, dean of the Ohio College of Chiropody.

Dr. A. O. Penney, of Washington, opined that if more manufacturers would "dress up" the sensible shoes, more women would be willing to get into them. He thought that would get more results than merely warning "a 100-pound girl that she is hitting her foot with a 100-pound hammer every time she takes a step and therefore that it behooves her to wear a shoe that takes up as much of the shock as possible."

The men, both past presidents of the National Association of Chiropodists, got together on the eve of the semi-annual convention of the Mid-Atlantic Association, bringing delegates from Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina and the District to today's session at the Washington Hotel.

"Of 24,000 persons treated at the clinic at our school, 18,000 were women. Why?" Dr. Harmolin asked, only in order to answer: "Largely because men wear sensible shoes and many women don't!"

Dr. Penney chimed in with a statistic of his own. "We pulled out handsful of cards from the thousands in our office files here, and found that we were treating four and one-half women to one man, and treating a woman on an average of four times as often as a man. Why? Much of it is due to high-heeled shoes with absence of the proper fastening."

Having unloaded their convictions on improper shoes, they were confronted with a question on the fad for painted toenails. Both men said it was outside their realm, being rather a cosmetic question.

Finn Shipping Undisturbed By Germany

Report of Blockade By Nazis Is Termed Without Foundation

Copyright by New York Times

Helsinki, Nov. 18.—Finnish shipping in the Gulf of Finland continues undisturbed by German submarines or armed merchant ships, and there is no evidence to confirm reports from Paris that German submarines and the Russian navy are cooperating in some sort of a blockade of Finland.

Owing to the Finnish mine fields along the whole coast, vessels sailing the fields are entering through passages west of Finland. There is no sign of Germany extending her trade blockade into the Gulf of Finland.

Nazis Release 8 Steamers

Helsinki, Nov. 18—(U.P.).—The Finnish radio announced tonight that eight of 15 Finnish steamers detained at German ports had been permitted to continue their voyages to the United States.

The ships had been detained at Keil, Stettin and Swinemunde during the Soviet-Finnish diplomatic negotiations, now broken off. Most of them were seized off Falsterbo, Sweden, where they were forced by shallow water to leave the Swedish territorial zone before undertaking the run to the North Sea.

Except for the time element there appeared to be no connection between the release and the Soviet-Finnish talks, and some observers believed the German action meant a lightening of blockade efforts.

Meanwhile, Finland, after six weeks of crisis, appeared to be returning to normal. There was even a renewal of hope that the Olympic games might, after all, be held in Finland next year as scheduled.

Relaxation Is Manifest

In Helsinki the signs of relaxation were manifold.

Small boys played again in the parks, where trees and shrubbery had been uprooted to make way for bomb shelters.

A general feeling of relief was emphasized by the arrival of the first foreign visitors, other than newspapermen, since the start of the discussions with Russia. Many of the visitors were from Moscow. They included Mrs. Laurance Steinhardt, wife of the American Ambassador to Russia; Angus Ward, United States Consul at Moscow, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Bohlen, of the United States Embassy there.

Situation Is Improving

Copyright by New York Times,

Moscow, Nov. 18.—Sensational stories that German warships are co-operating in the Gulf of Finland in a Soviet blockade of the Finnish coast are without foundation, because there is no Sovient blockade, it is explained here.

German seizure of several Finnish ships in the course of Germany's attempt to blockade the Allies probably was responsible for the stories.

Actually the situation on the Russo-Finnish frontier seems slowly but steadily improving. Prospects of any immediate hostile move are steadily decreasing.

Roosevelt Library Opening in 1941

bait he had dangled for third-term speculation.

This speculation also was based on the date of expiration of his present term. In Washington Wednesday at the laying of the cornerstone of the Jefferson Memorial, he said it was the second time he had come to the memorial in an official capacity and added that by January, 1941, he hoped to be able to come to the final dedication of the memorial itself, scheduled for that month.

The politically minded immediately wondered whether he wanted to return in an official capacity or as a private citizen. He did nothing to clarify the matter yesterday when he said he deliberately had thrown in the sentence about 1941 and that everybody bit.

It's going to cost money, incidentally, for the casual sightseer to drop in at the library. Hassett said a small fee would be charged visitors, the money to be used to defray costs of maintaining and staffing the library after it has been turned over to the Government. Students and research workers will have free access to the 6,000,000 Presidential papers and other collections.

Frank C. Walker, who has been in charge of raising funds for the library, will preside at the cornerstone laying. Besides Mr. Roosevelt, Archibald MacLeish, Librarian of Congress, and R. D. W. Connor, archivist of the United States, will speak.

The President has invited the public to the corner-stone laying at 3 p. m. tomorrow. He will make a brief talk. Three radio networks will relay it. A luncheon for a few guests and a reception for a larger number will precede the ceremonies.

Time Bombs Panic London In Blackout

Piccadilly Crowds In Confusion Over Four Terrorist Blasts

By Raymond Daniell.

Copyright by New York Times

London, Nov. 18.—Hundreds of pleasure seekers in this blacked-out capital were thrown into confusion in Piccadilly tonight, where four bombs were exploded within half an hour.

Irish Republican Army terrorists were blamed.

Because of the blackout, the crowds in Piccadilly at the time of the explosions were small. However, crowds rushed excitedly about as fire engines gathered at the scene of the blasts. As far as could be learned no one was hurt.

Two unexploded time bombs were discovered and rendered harmless by the police, who conducted a widespread hunt under the flaring light of big torches, in search of the I. R. A. terrorists and any additional missiles they may have planted.

One of the bombs was found against the window of a Piccadilly Circus telegraph office. Another was found in Park Lane next to a bank which was damaged in a recent explosion.

Since I. R. A. terrorists began their campaign of violence at the beginning of the year there have been 150 explosions, mostly in the provinces. The worst was at Broadgate, Coventry, in August, when 5 persons were killed and 100 injured.

The most recent explosions in London were on July 26, when a man was killed and 15 persons were injured in a bomb blast at Kings Cross station, and five others hurt in a similar explosion at Victoria station.

The London West End was the scene of a series of post box explosions last June. Earlier in the year there were explosions at the Tottenham Court road and Leicester Square subway stations and in several public cloak rooms.

Recovery to Last, Roosevelt Advised

sion yesterday awarded a new contract for about 500 airplanes to the North American Aviation Co., at Inglewood, Calif. The French mission is buying thousands of horses and mules.

American business, however, appears to be moving cautiously on the war trade. The United States Chamber of Commerce said today business men were more intent upon the promotion of normal internal development.

"This has become necessary not only as a matter of furthering national economic and social progress, but also as a matter of fortifying our internal economy against the disturbing effects of the war," the chamber said.

American exporters already are reporting increases in business with Latin-American and certain neutral European countries that have been cut off from their normal German, English and French sources by the war.

Postmaster General Farley, who regards postal revenues as a true business barometer, said they had amounted to $234,987,102 in the first four months of the new fiscal year. This is an increase of 3.17 per cent over the same period last year. Farley predicted the postal service would yield a surplus this fiscal year.

The Labor Department reported increased employment gains, and a shortage of skilled labor in certain industries. Approximately 1,500,000 persons, who were either idle or on relief last year, now are on pay rolls.

A temporary increase in employment is expected at retail and wholesale stores in December, resulting from the Christmas trade. The early Thanksgiving will give these temporary employes another week's pay envelope. Thousands will be given temporary employment by the postal service to handle Christmas mail.

Throughout the fall department store sales have averaged nearly 10 per cent above last year. Scrap steel consumption reached a new peak of 3,974,000 tons during October, an increase of 68 per cent above the same month last year.

Japanese Drive Menaces China's Vital Supply Routes

Nipponese Report Advance Troops 30 Miles From Nanning; Civilians Flee North in Panic

Copyright by New York Times.

Shanghai, Nov. 18.—A rapid advance by the Japanese army from the shores of the Gulf of Tonking in the vicinity of Pakhoi across a narrow portion of Kwangtung province and into Kwangsi province would probably have very important political as well as military effects.

The Japanese state that their vanguard is only 30 miles from Nanning, formerly Kwangsi's provincial capital, after a 50-mile advance in four days.

They state also that Chinese forces and civilians are fleeing northward in panic, policemen have abandoned their posts and that the city is being looted by Chinese.

Japan's foothold in Kwangsi, if acquired, is expected in Japanese circles here to embolden Lung Yun, Yunnan governor, in a recalcitrant attitude toward Chungking. General Lung has long been suspected of friendliness toward Former Premier Wang Ching-wei's peace and new government plans.

Human Plan Opposed

Recently he has been violently opposed to Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek's orders to send a portion of the Yunnan provincial armies into Hunan, thus making a place within his province for several divisions of the Central Government troops, which would have tightened Chungking's hold on Yunnan.

The highest official Japanese sources in Shanghai assured this writer that the Kwangsi invasion was no mere diversion and not merely designed to cut off the port of Pakhoi, in South China, from its hinterland. The expedition, it is declared, will develop into a strategic move of the greatest importance, eventually cutting off Chungking from access to supplies via the Haiphong (French Indo-China)-Yunnan Railway.

This, say the Japanese, would also render virtually useless China's new Burma highway. If these dual objects were achieved, China's only foreign source of war materials would be the Soviet, using the overland route leading through portions of the northwest, dominated by Chinese Communist forces.

Invaders Push North

Instead of driving against Pakhoi itself, the Japanese invaders pushed north and, they declare, captured the town of Yamchow on the Yamchow-Nanning highway and then rapidly seized Taitze, a border town 15 miles north of Yamchow. They crossed the provincial border at dusk, they report, and entered Nasiao, a small town 8 miles north of the border, and state that they continued another 10 miles despite the darkness to capture Tatang.

The Chinese armies' preparedness in ditching highways and destroying bridges apparently failed to slow up the invaders' advance and according to their reports they easily entered the fifteenth province of China to experience Japanese occupation since the hostilities began on July 7, 1937.

Japanese Advance 50 miles

Hongkong, Nov. 18 (AP).—The Japanese army announced today that it had made a 50-mile advance in four days and entered Kwangsi province in its thrust at China's southwestern "lifeline" supply routes.

Chinese official spokesmen admitted that the Japanese had advanced 30 miles since the landing but said the Chinese withdrawal was according to plan, to get the invaders out of the coastal plain into the hilly hinterland, where defense would be easier.

Chinese expressed belief the Japanese would not push far inland, but would establish air bases from which to harry the supply routes still further west through Yunnan Province.

Bar to Probe 'Persecution' Of Debtors

Vicious Practices Are Being Used on Some, Darr Asserts

Persecution of debtors and their employers by some finance companies and installment houses, will be investigated by a special committee of the District Bar Association headed by Attorney George D. Horning, jr.

Sefton Darr, president of the bar association, cited abuse of legal processes by some Washington creditors in an 18-page analysis he sent Horning. Darr asked that the committee determine whether new criminal or civil laws were needed.

"Although such practices are employed by only a comparatively few concerns," Darr said, "their far-reaching effect, as well as their pernicious nature and the harm being done, justify and demand thorough action by the bar association."

Cayton Decision Is Quoted

Darr said "department stores and a very large majority of the other retail stores, including credit houses, are not making use" of the persecution technique to collect their bills.

Horning's committee was requested to investigate widespread use of wage assignments, conditional sale agreements, dunning letters, telephone and telegraph harrassment of debtors and employers, persecution of debtors and employers with attachments and the abuse of deficiency judgments.

Darr quoted a decision in which Judge Nathan Cayton of the Municipal Court declared that "attempts at salary buying ought to be discouraged and suppressed. Such assignments are oppressive in their very nature, victimizing those who need protection the most, arming creditors with an unfair advantage, converting every employer into a potential collection agency, rendering insecure the very job on which the employe depends to pay his debts, and ultimately threatening to present a social and economic problem of no small importance."

Darr cited laws forbidding wage assignments in Alabama, Connecticut, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Missouri and New York.

Contract Is Criticized

Listing 11 rigid provisions of the conditional sales contract, Darr said its "strict and stringest provisions are weapons used by the credit companies." He suggested that Horning's committee determine whether part of the conditional sale contracts ought to be outlawed by act of Congress.

Darr pointed out that the District Court of Appeals, in an opinion by Justice Edgerton, denounced dunning letters. The appellate court followed "the growing tendency to check offensive collection methods" by allowing a debtor to sue for damages he claimed were occasioned by such persecution.

Justice Vinson, in the same case, commented that "overbearing, browbeating and other 'high-powered' methods to compel collection ought not to be well received in court."

Speaking of dunning letters to employers of debtors, Darr observed that "the United States mails should not be used by credit houses for the purpose of revealing shortcomings of employes to their employers, except in extraordinary cases and in peculiar circumstances, and that the mails should not be used by credit houses to annoy and harass employers over their employes' debts."

Workers Set Full Chest as Minimum Aim

Failure Won't Be Tolerated, Says Chief; 37% Still Lacking

"We dare not fail!" declared Chauncey G. Parker, jr., general chairman of the Community Chest campaign, yesterday in a message to volunteers urging redoubled efforts to reach the chest goal of $2,000,000.

A total of $1,340,216, or 60.01 per cent of the goal had been reached through Friday, he said.

"We all know the great need that exists and we all know that the $2,000,000 goal is the bare minimum—the lowest sum that the conscience of the community can consider," said Parker.

Hines Spurs Workers

Gen. Frank T. Hines, leader of the Government unit, declared that a larger average gift from Government workers and complete coverage would be necessary to bring the unit to its goal, of which 73.31 per cent has so far been reached.

The position of other units yesterday was 56.34 per cent for business firms; 67.3 per cent for residential; 70.87 per cent for avance gifts; 32.73 per cent for the suburban area, and 32.51 per cent for colored citizens.

W. W. Wheeler, chairman of the residential unit, stressed the necessity of reaching every possible giver in a message to solicitors. He urged them to keep up their spirit of determination "not along through today, tomorrow and the next day, but until we can say to this city that the workers in our unit have made one hundrer per cent of their goal."

"Giving a Privilege"

Charles B. Dulcan, sr., chairman of the business unit, emphasized that giving is the "privilege . . . of our great democracy. Nothing forces us," he said, "except our charity and our sense of social decency."

Workers in suburban areas were reminded by their chairman, Donald L. Chamberlin, that "artificial boundaries do not exist in the common needs of the sick and unfortunate, who must rely on the generosity of givers through the Washington Community Chest."

Nathan A. Dobbins, chairman of the Capital unit, declared that nothing less than success would be tolerated. "We will not let up till we have finished our task," he said.

Burglars Take $5,000 in Loot

A Northwest home was broken into and looted of goods valued at more than $5,000, it was reported to police yesterday.

While Robert V. Fletcher, vice president and general counsel of the Association of American Railroads, living at 3601 Forty-ninth street, was out of town, the home was ransacked and valuables including silverware, clothing, and household effects were stolen, a maid told detectives.

Capital News In Brief

A Good Samaritan

Francis J. Humphrey, of 1818 Riggs place northwest, told police today he had been a good Samaritan last Monday.

Meeting a fellow he believed to be down and out, he allowed him to share his apartment. Humphrey went home last night to find missing two daybeds, one green oak breakfast set, an easy chair, a radio and an overcoat.

Burned Painting

Merle Blair, 42, of 4423 Potomac avenue northwest, was cleaning a wall with steel wool soaked in paint remover yesterday when he brushed over an electric outlet. The paint remover burst into flame and Blair went to Casualty Hospital where he was treated for second decree burns on his hand.

A Crooked Dinner?

Somewhere in Washington's underworld a big party was held last night, police believe. At least among the many reports of larceny during the day three indicated preparations for a feast.

Fred Shuster, of 1616 Irving street northwest, reported the loss of $40 worth of butter from his truck; Albert Comgee, of 14 Florida avenue lost $28 worth of whiskey and cigarettes, from his restaurant, and William Gittlin, of the 900 block of Third street southeast, lost $21 in cigarettes and candy. Where the thieves got their bread and meat the police hadn't learned.

Youth Is Wounded

George Elwood Fletcher, 16, was accidentally shot yesterday by a .22-caliber rifle he told police he found in the woods near Bolling Field. After treatment at Gallinger Hospital for a wound over the right eye, he was sent home.

Typewriters Stolen

Quiet prevails in the offices of Representative J. Buell Snyder (Democrat), of Pennsylvania.

Yesterday a sneak thief entered his sanctum in the House Office Building and walked out with two noiseless typewriters. They were valued at $100 each.

Seven(s) Shot

Police who raced to a vacant lo in 900 block of G street southwest last night in response to a telephone call that someone had been shot, found a number of men huddled over something on the ground. They piled out of their squad cars and descended on the huddlers.

The huddlers fled and police discovered the shooting. Only craps had been shot.

500 Frolic at Variety Club's Annual Party To Benefit Capital Underprivileged Children

Variety Club members threw a party last night, and if these two pictures are any criterion, then everyone had a good time. In the upper, the photographer has snapped (left to right) Mrs. Lewis Saltz, Thomas Brahany and Evelyn Tyner, well-known pianist. Below are Kathryn Mayfield, Jackie Heller and Carter Barron, the entertainment chairman

Five hundred persons dined and wined at the Willard Hotel last night, all because an abandoned baby found in a Pittsburgh theater ten years ago, was adopted by a group of showmen.

The occasion was the sixth annual dinner-dance and show of Washington Tent, No. 11, Variety Clubs, a branch of the original Pittsburgh godfathers, devoted to keeping Washington's underprivileged children alive and healthy.

It was one of those parties where every one paid for the privilege of having a good time—distinguished guests and program committee alike—and of contributing a bit for mother milk banks, ambulances and premature-birth stations.

Spangled with stage and radio celebrities of Washington theaters and night clubs, the program inspired a riot of laughter with a "surprise package"—a Floradora sextette act put on (both male and female parts) by Variety Club members.

Participating in the entertainment program were Phil Lampkin and his orchestra; Bert Granoff, Mary Martin, Kathryn Mayfield, Evelyn Tyner, Gene Archer, Patricia Norman, singers; the Capitol Rhythm Rockets and the Dagenham Girl Pipers, with skirt and skirl; juggling Bob Ripa and dancing Lida Sue; and Gene Shelton, Georges and Jalna, the Oehman Twins, the Juggling Jewels and "Smiley" Burnette and his cowboy team. Jack Heller, radio singer, flew down from Pittsburgh to take part; George Beatty served as master of ceremonies.

Officers for 1940, introduced to the gathering, are Sidney Lust, who succeeds Abe Lichtman as chief barker; Hardie Meakin, reelected as first assistant chief barker; Eddy Fontaine, second assistant chief barker; San Galanty, reelected treasurer; Ray Bell, reelected executive secretary.

National Citation Won

The board of governors will include Meakin, Lust, Galanty, Fontaine, Harry Brown, Harry Lohmeyer, John Payette, Archie Engel, Nate Golden, Clarke Davis, Fred Rohrs and, as ex officio members, the former chief barkers, Lichtman, Carter Barron, Rudy Berger and A. Julian Brylawski.

In the last year the Washington tent was awarded the Variety Clubs' first national citation for its gift of ten premature birth stations to Sibley Memorial Hospital.

J. L. Anderson, 1144 Connecticut avenue northwest, was declared the winner of a new automobile.

Legion Commander Given Ring

Outgoing Commander Walton E. Terrell, of Second Division Post, No. 28, was presented with a ring last night by members of the post at a banquet and dance at the New Colonial Hotel. D. C. Bandit Suspect Shot by Police

Auto Theft Charges Face Gunman Trapped by Officers

John Pershing Byars, 22-year-old man who boasted he would "kill or be killed," before submitting to capture, was at the District Jail last night charged with theft of five automobiles, safecracking and housebreaking.

He was seized last Thursday only after having been shot in the leg by Detective Sergt. Paul Ambrose, one of three detectives who cornered the armed suspect in an areaway. The wound was superficial and not serious.

Search of the youth's room in the 600 Second street northwest, disclosed a quantity of cigarettes which bore the stamp of a chain grocery branch in the 100 block Bladensburg road northeast, several sets of stolen automobile tags and safe-blowing equipment.

Store Ransacked

The store was ransacked and the safe burned open several weeks ago by yeggmen who escaped with $1,573 cash and an undetermined amount of cigarettes, according to Harry Lineweaver, manager, Byars was charged with the offense.

Detectives have sought the boy and his companions for more than three months. He was identified as one of a trio who escaped a rain of police bullets in a stolen car last month. The driver attempted to run over Detective Sergt. Jacob Wolf at that time, it was said.

Capture of Byars came after Detective Sergts. Joseph Sincavitz, John Curtis and Paul Ambrose found a girl sitting in a parked stolen car. From her they learned his identity and arrived at the place just as he was leaving.

Drawing a gun, Byars fled through a back yard. The detectives drew their own revolvers and Ambrose fired at the youth as the latter aimed his weapon. Ambrose said the fugitive then threw his gun away and gave himself up.

Byars was arraigned before Police Court Judge Edward M. Curran yesterday on a grand larceny charge in connection with the theft of the automobile of Edwin M. Henson, 508 Thirteenth street southeast. He was held for the grand jury without bail and remanded to jail pending fruther investigation by police.

Lieut. John H. Fowler, chief of the squad of detectives who made the capture, placed the safecracking and four other grand larceny counts against the man after the arraignment.

He was accused of stealing the automobile of Edward L. Carlton, 1617 Lawrence street northeast; Harry A. Radzikowsky, 6301 Sixteenth street northwest; Fred Adamson, 807 North Capitol street and Truman N. Finch, 2514 Perry street northeast.

During the investigation which led to the seizure of the boy, detectives said they were told by his associates that he had remarked he would "not be taken alive," and that he spent many hours practicing with a pistol.

Hazen Compliments Hargrove, Retiring After 52-Year Career

District Purchasing Officer, Who Leaves Place December 1, Holds Longest Record of Service of Any Employe; Began at $2 a Day

"As one old timer and old Virginian, to another," Commissioner Hazen last night paid tribute to Marion C. Hargrove, District purchasing officer retiring after 52 years of service, at a testimonial dinner at the Mayflower Hotel.

To more than 200 District officials and employes, Hazen declared his "highest respect for the efficiency and integrity" of Hargrove, who had the longest service record of any municipal employe.

"It is such men as you who have made the District government what it is today," Hazen declared.

Referring to Hargrove's duties in expending millions of dollars annually in District business, the Commissioner asserted, "There has been no man with so much temptation thrown in his path . . . but with all this business in your hands there has never been a finger pointed at you in reproach."

Hazen presented Hargrove with a testimonial certificate expressing on behalf of the Commissioners and all District employes their "sincere appreciation for his many years of faithful service."

District Auditor Daniel J. Donovan traced Hargrove's career in Washington since he became a Supreme Court page at 16. Joining the District government as a $2-a-day assistant in a field engineering party, he rose through promotions until, at retirement, he held his present $5,400 job, Donovan said.

Hargrove, whose retirement takes effect December 1, reminisced over his career which started when District personnel was housed in "an antiquated building, where we toted in coal and toted out ashes" at Four-and-a-Half street and Pennsylvania avenue. Expenditures then were $4,000,000, as compared with $53,000,000 today.

The Navy Permits 2 Thanksgivings

Acting Secretary Edison provided yesterday for two Thanksgiving holidays for some of the Navy's civilian employes.

He directed that employes generally should be idle on November 23, the Thanksgiving Day proclaimed by President Roosevelt, but authorized Navy Yard commanders to release employes from duty on the day designated as Thanksgiving by State and local officials.

Whether employes are paid for the additional holiday will depend on whether they are due leave.

Carolinian's Crash in Flight Writes Finis to Saga of Woe

Misfortune decended in a heap upon a 33-year-old Carolinian yesterday:

He received a telegram that his brother had been critically injured in a traffic accident in North Carolina; his automobile was involved in a hit-run accident, and finally he was seriously hurt when his automobile overturned in a race with police.

According to park police, license tags listed to the man were found entangled with the automobile of Charles Smith, Capitol Heights, Md., who said he had been struck at Third street and Adams drive southwest, by a car that failed to stop.

A short time later, Policeman Robert Rosin, Eleventh Precinct, took out after a speeding car at St. Elizabeth's Hospital. After a 2-mile chase at better than 60 miles an hour, the police said, the fleeping car overturned on a curve at Livingstone road and the District line.

The man was found underneath the wreckage and he was taken to Casualty Hospital. He suffered broken ribs, internal injuries and severe cuts.

The man's wife told police her husband had received a telegram about his brother and was going for his mother to take her to North Carolina, when the last accident took place. No charges had been placed against him last night.

Secret Police Squad to Hunt Curb Bookies

Hazen Puts Average Downtown Gambling Profit at $2,000

Rookie police, unknown even to other bluecoats, will form a special squad in Commissioner Hazen's fight against curbstone bookies, it was revealed yesterday.

Determined to rid the city of downtown gamblers, Commissioner Hazen yesterday called in his special investigations chief, Lieut. Earl P. Hartman, for a long conference to lay the groundwork of a "fight to a finish."

Although plans were not made public, it was understood the special squad will operate along downtown streets where bookies have been seen in operation. Members of the squad will be assigned to no other duties but the drive against bookmakers.

Last year Commissioner Hazen, after receiving numerous complaints against the curbstone bookies, ordered an immediate drive, but after a couple of months the bookies returned and still are operating.

The curbstone bookies accept bets only from persons known to them and their daily average take is said to be in the neighborhood of $2,000 in the downtown area.

Commissioner Hazen said the drive follows complaints, including some from members of Congress.

Arlington Baby Is Judged Best At Food Show

The curtain rang down on the food show last night as babies paraded for the title of "Washington's best" and upwards of 7,000 competed for a score of prizes.

Sixteen-month-old Jimmy Allan, son of Mrs. N. Allan, of Arlington, Va., won a cash award in the competition in which tots from one to four toddled across the dias.

In the comic stunt of the evening that saw women lacing men into corsets for reducing purposes, Miss Helen Bloedorn, 21, of 2121 Virginia avenue northwest, and G. W. Young, 49, of 5327 Forty-second street northwest, won cash prizes.

Two patrons went home with canine additions to their households, as prizes. John J. Scanlon, 220 Ninth street southwest, won a cocker spaniel and Anna Rees, 1363 E street southeast, a collie pup.

Mrs. Francis Lutkavage, 2138 O street northwest, was presented a sewing machine and Mrs. William Payne, 2701 Thirty-third streets southeast, a cooking set.

Free Lunches In High Schools To Be Studied

The Commissioners yesterday referred to Robert E. Bondy, welfare director, a request from the Board of Education to extend the free school lunch plan to needy pupils in vocational, junior and senior high schools.

The wefare director will confer with District Auditor Daniel J. Donovan to prepare a report for the Commissioners on estimated cost of the extension. At present students in elementary grades are provided free lunches under a joint District-WPA plan, which utilizes food provided by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation.

Under this plan, workers are supplied by WPA; fuel, heat and light are supplied by the District, and some food by the suprlus commodities agency. Under the proposed plan, free lunches for older students would be distributed through school cafterias.

The District's present contribution for free lunches is $85,000 a year.

Levy by Banks May End Use Of Food Stamp

U. S. to Abandon Plan In Rochester if Charge For Service Is Made

By the Associated Press

Rochester, N. Y., Nov. 18.—The Federal Surplus Commodity Corporation's food stamp plan—conceived in Washington, born in Rochester and dedicated to the Nation's poor—tonight faced sudden death December 1 in the city of its nativity.

Uncle Sam, angered at the Rochester Clearing House Association decision to assess a 1 per cent charge for cashing the food stamps, of which the Government gives one free for every two sold to relief clients, declared, "Make the charge and we will abandon the plan."

To which replied the clearing house association: "Their redemption costs money. We charge 1 per cent for their redemption December 1."

The FSCC started the food stamp plan, which since has spread across the Nation, on May 16. It was designed to distribute through the corner grocery store foods designated by the Government as surplus.

During the six months, the local FSCC office reported this week, $896,906 worth of orange stamps were sold. At the same time $448,453 in blue stamps was given free to relief clients and went into retail grocery stores in payment for surplus foods. Formerly, the FSCC distributed these foods through depots.

The grocers, caught between two fires, called a meeting for next Monday to discuss the situation. Their stamp committee will meet with representatives of the Chamber of Commerce and the clearing house association.

President William Schalber, of the Monroe County Food Dealers Association, said:

"We'd hate to lose that extra business."

The bankers announced this week they would make the 1 per cent service charge because of the extra help required to clear the stamps, which grocers deposited in lieu of cash. The stamps also are redeemable at the local FSCC offices, or may be traded to wholesalers for their products.

Red Press Reviles U. S. as Shylock And War-Monger

Moscow, Nov. 18.—Leading off with a cartoon showing Uncle Sam dreaming of moneybags and surrounded by a pile of human skulls, with the caption "God Send Us A Protracted War," the Soviet press has again quite a number of items directed against America.

Included are a statistical survey of the productive capacity of the various war industries, a speech of Theodore Dreiser in which he is represented as afraid of being arrested if he names the Soviet Union, and some notes about the prohibition of the book "Grapes of Wrath," by the St. Louis Municipal Library.

The newspaper Trud publishes a long hostile article reviewing United States relations with the Philippines since 1890.

"The true visage of American democracy pouring out crocodile tears over the fate of the small peoples of Europe," is declared to be revealed by the above "facts."

Set an Example, Says Mrs. Roosevelt

New York, Nov. 18 (INS).—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt declared today that peace may be restored to the world by America setting an example in the solution of its own national problems. Speaking to the Bronx Fellowship in Herman Ridder Junior High School, she said:

"By showing the world that we can solve our own problems through democratic means, other nations may have the same hopes and ideals. This is a problem where we, as a nation, are at the crossroads. Either we go forward with our democratic ideals preserved and hold to our liberties or fear will ride us and we will find ourselves restricted in our liberties through fear."

Man Who Suggested Change To Have Two Thanksgivings

Department Store Head Amazed by Uproar; Still Sure Early Date Will Spur Shopping; Good Business Inspired Holiday, He Says

By the Associated Press

New York, Nov. 18.—After all the fuss and flurry about Thanksgiving, it developed today that the household of the man who made the first recorded request for an earlier date will have two Turkey Day dinners after all—on the 23d and the 30th.

The man is Lew Hahn, genial gray-haired manager of the National Retail Dry Goods Association, who suggested to Secretary of Commerce Hopkins in August that Thanksgiving be shoved ahead a week. Shortly afterward, President Roosevelt said he intended to propose such a change.

The immediate prospect of sitting down twice to Thanksgiving turkey—once on the 23d, the date New York is observing, and again when his youngest son returns for Thanksgiving from Brown University, in Rhode Island, which is observing the 30th—hasn't shaken Hahn's belief that the idea of an earlier Thanksgiving is fundamentally sound.

He's convinced it will enable the public—at least, the part that's observing the earlier date—to do its Christmas shopping more easily, with less worry and fuss, and that it probably will lead to more business and increased employment.

"A great many people who have been opposing the thing talk as if Thanksgiving were a fixed date; but it never has been. It has roamed all over the calendar. And it's only one day earlier this year than it was last," Hahn said.

"Apparently there's no difficulty getting folks to give thanks on the 24th—why not on the 23d?"

He doesn't know for sure that he had anything to do with getting the date advanced. The President's mind may have been made up, he said.

Hahn has been ragged by some friends who said, "Why should an American tradition give way to economic reasons?" His reply has been:

"Why did the Pilgrims give thanks?

"For bounteous harvests. Thanksgiving is peculiarly linked to the economic needs of the people.

"No one certainly has it in his mind not to give thanks for our many blessings. But we can give thanks just as devoutly on the 23d as on the 24th."

Japanese Ready To Install Puppet Chinese Regime

Tokyo, Nov. 18 (U.P.).—Premier Abe announced today preparations to establish a new Central China government under Wang Ching-Wei are nearly complete.

"Preparations to inaugurate a new central China government are so nearly complete that Japan's policy in China can be considered as having reached the stage of a new order in the Far East," Abe said. "A position of construction has been gained."

Premier Abe said any peace negotiations between Japan and Chiang Kai-shek are impossible.

With establishment of Wang's regime at Nanking, Abe said, the Chiang Kai-shek government at Chungking will cease to exist, so far as Japan is concerned.

San Diego, Calif., Nov. 18 (AP).—The Republican Party, Senator Bridges (Republican), New Hampshire, said tonight, "must make the people realize that the supposed humanitarianism of the New Deal is false; we must give them a vision of a truly humane Government."

He spoke at a banquet under auspices of San Diego County Republican organizations, opening his Western campaign for the Republican nomination for the Presidency.

Anti-Russian Feeling Rises Among Turks

Despite Official Policy Of Friendship All Moves Are Watched

By Cyrus Sulzberger

Copyright by New York Times

Ankara, Nov. 18.—Despite an increase in popular anti-Russian feeling, the Turkish government is adhering to a policy of friendship with the Soviet Union.

The friendship, however, is not unaccompanied by suspicion. A sharp eye is being kept on all sectors in which Turkey considers herself vitally interested and in which appearance of the Soviet Baltic technique may have alarming consequences.

Turkish-Russian amity is one of the odd features of the last two decades. For centuries distrust, punctuated by active warfare, prevailed between the two countries. The Russian desire of a Black Sea entrance made her a hereditary enemy but when Kamal Ataturk revolted against the Sultanate the Soviet supported him. From this sprang a sentimental friendship between the two former enemies.

In 1936 when Russia opposed Turkish interests at the Montreux conference on the Dardanelles question the first seeds of discord arose. Later in the same year Kemal became angry at a fancied Soviet slight.

Saracoglu Slight Resented

The treatment of Foreign Minister Saracoglu on his Moscow visit has brought to the surface a latent antipathy to Russia. It is widely felt in Turkey that he was given a rude welcome by his old friends and certain deputies now are calling for an open anti-Soviet policy.

Saracoglu, however, feels that the Russian interest is to remain friendly with Turkey for the present. This he is said to believe was proven by the Soviet invitation to join a mutual assistance pact.

Turkey was to be the linking pin between the Soviet and the democracies. The pact was to have a subsidiary clause annulling its effect in case of a Russian war against England and France, just as the Turkish, French, English accord is not operative for Turkey against Russia.

It is thought here that the chief reasons for failure of Moscow to follow through with the pact was the appearance of Nazi foreign minister Von Ribbentrop, who granted the Soviet a free hand in the Baltic in exchange for dropping the idea.

Balkan Advance Feared

However, informed quarters in Ankara believe the government is merely waiting for Russia once more to propose the same idea when she is finished establishing herself in the Baltic, at Germany's expense. Indeed, there are rumors Moscow already has asked resumption of conversations but these have not been confirmed and are thought premature.

The government believes the Soviet Union is not yet strong enough for an aggressive war and therefore will avoid war.

However, Turkey, as much as Italy and the Balkan nations, fears the possibility of a Russian advance through eastern Rumania and Bulgaria. That is one reason why Turkey is believed ready to talk frankly with another hereditary enemy, Italy, and why a friendly arrangement between those two countries is not unforeseen.

$1,000 Gift Accepted by Sculptress

A member of Congress yesterday left a busy desk to call upon a little old lady, hand her a $1,000 check, and assure her she was in no danger of eviction.

She was gloomy, though grateful, when he left.

"Oh, it's horrible being on charity like this," sighed Mrs. Adelaide Johnson, the sculptress of Susan B. Anthony, as she face Representative Sol Broom, of New York.

The check, gift of an anonymous New York nurse, was handed to Mrs. Johnson in the "marble room" of her studio, 230 Maryland avenue northeast. Chips of marble from the busts which she attacked with a hammer last week, in protest against her impending eviction, still lay on the floor.

Bloom later disclosed that he has arranged with the owner of the property to permit Mrs. Johnson to retain permanent occupancy simply by paying interest on the purchase price, insurance and taxes. This should amount to no more than $60 a month, the Congressman declared, and contributions which have been received are adequate to meet expenses for some time to come.

Among the many contributors to date, Bloom said, is Joseph P. Tumulty, who was secretary to President Wilson. He sent a check for $20.

Mrs. Johnson, who was winning art awards as far back as 1877, said she still has hope some one will endow her and her work.

"If only some one would endow me with $100,000 and make me free!" she exclaimed.

Washington Free of Quake Peril, Says Father Sohon

Recent Tremors Are Attributed to Earth's Efforts to Correct Crust in North Atlantic States, Dented Eons Back by Glaciers

Washington residents need fear no visitation of earthquakes such as shook Baltimore and Philadelphia Friday night, and the coast from Baltimore to New Jersey on Tuesday.

Nor are these tremors signs the Eastern seaboard is about to crumble into the sea, scientists explained yesterday.

The shakes are merely left-over effects of glaciers that slipped off New England some hundreds of thousands of years ago, said Father Frederick Sohon, director of the seismological observatory at Georgetown University.

Weight of the glaciers dented the earth's crust in New England, and raised a corresponding hump in New Jersey, Eastern Pennyslvania, Delaware and Maryland, he said. Ever since then the crust has been slowly and jerkily righting itself, rising in New England, and sinking farther south.

This causes "a multitude of little shakes" too slight for the unassisted passerby to notice, Father Sohon said. Even the seismograph at Georgetown is not sensitive enough to record them. Father Sohon couldn't be sure some quakes hadn't shook Washington, but he thought it unlikely, as this city is well south of the hump.

Traffic Director Van Duzer had no idea there were so many people who know how to spell.

The world looked good to him yesterday morning.

That was before the phone began ringing. Some of the callers were laughing; others sounded indignant. But they all told Van Duzer he doesn't know how to spell.

The traffic director and several colleagues were photographed Friday gazing with pride on a handsome sign just erected at the Bladensburg road entrance to the District. The sign, advising motorists not to drive more than 25 miles an hour in Washington, announced in letters 10 inches high: "Welcome to your Nation's Capitol."

Washington, as Van Duzer now repeats in his sleep, is the Capital. The big building with the dome is the Capitol.

"I don't see how it happened," he mourned. "I never noticed the mistake and nobody else did. There were four newspapermen out there when that picture was taken," he added spitefully, "and they didn't catch the mistake either."

Trucker Lures Bandit to Death By Posse's Guns

Convict Slain After Duel Rages Through Small Illinois Town

By International News Service

Shawneetown, Ill., Nov. 18.—Willard Shockley, young ex-convict, was riddled with bullets by a posse today when he shot it out in a running gun battle after he had been trapped in a clothing store.

Shockley, 23, had been sought for critically wounding State Highway Patrolman Cecil Brokmyer, 48, when the officer stopped him last Wednesday to question him about a robbery.

The desperado was slain as he lay in the back of a car in which he finally took refuge and as he was emptying his gun at the surrounding posse.

Shortly before the gun battle, a coal truck driver recognized Shockley walking along the highway near Shawneetown. The driver informed his employer, Noah Kerstein, who got into another truck, drove to the highway and picked up Shockley who had signaled for a lift.

Knowing his passenger was the man wanted for the shooting of Brokmyer, Kerstein drove on into town and, on the pretext of needing some gasoline, stopped the car, jumped out and telephoned Sheriff Edward Hines.

Shockley went into the store of James Coleman and was about to buy a pair of overalls when Deputy Reuben Davis walked in and put a gun in Shockley's back, ordering him to "put up your hands."

Shockley whirled and whipped out a pistol, but before he could fire Davis shot him in the stomach. The young bandit dashed for a rear door, stumbled, staggered to his feet and shot at Davis, then ran through an alley and hid under a porch.

By this time, Sheriff Hines and volunteer possemen had joined Davis and they poured bullets into Shockley's refuge and drove him out. He came out still firing and ran to a car which was parked on the street nearby.

Hines deployed his men around the car and then ordered Shockley to come out with his hands up.

"Come and get me," the bandit answered and shot at Hines. The posse then fired until the bandit's gun was silent.

When Sheriff Hines opened the door of the car, Shockley was dead.

Private Paul E. Chappelle, attached to Eighth Princinct Station, suffered serious head and arm injuries early today when struck by a hit-run motorist, believed to have been drunk, on Wisconsin avenue between Woodley street and Massachusetts avenue.

Off duty at midnight, Chappelle was driving to his home, 1420 North Frederick street, Arlington, Va., when he encountered a friend, Richard A. Lowe, of Upper Marlboro, Md. Both drew up their autos at the Wisconsin avenue curb and Chappelle stepped to the running board of Lowe's car for a chat.

Suddenly, according to Lowe, a small dark auto flashed by, throwing Chappelle to the ground. The policeman was rushed to Emergency Hospital. Police said that the car, believed carrying District license plates, struck a parked auto before hitting Chappelle. It sped off toward Maryland.

Virginia A. Davis, 75, of 4425 Fourteenth street northwest, was seriously injured last night when she was struck by an automobile while crossing Connecticut avenue near Porter street northwest. She was admitted to Emergency Hospital with severe head injuries.

Miss Vivian Buckler, 27, of 2114 First street northwest, suffered undetermined injuries early today when her car overturned on Queens Chapel road near the District line.

C.I.O. Certified As Agent for Briggs Labor

NLRB Order Applies To All of Company's 7 Parts, Body Plants

By International News Service

Marking a new victory for the C. I. O., the National Labor Relations Board yesterday certified its United Automobile Workers as the sole, company-wide bargaining agent for production and maintenance employes at seven Briggs Manufacturing Co. plants in Detroit, Hamtramck and Highland Park, Mich., and Evansville, Ind.

The American Federation of Labor had contended in a recent hearing that employes at each plant constituted a proper bargaining unit. The board held the workers at each plant have, under the labor act, the right to choose the same organization to represent them, and that, through similarity of wages and working conditions, they all constitute a "proper bargaining unit."

Results of seven elections held in the plants in September were cited by the labor board to show that the C. I. O. union had been designated as the collective bargaining agent by a majority of the workers in each of the seven plants.

[In these elections the vote showed an overwhelming majority for the C. I. O. union in all plants except the Evansville plant.—Editor's note.]

The board said that the Briggs company did not object to the employer-wide bargaining basis, but at oral arguments indicated its approval.

Garment Unions Quarrel

The Independent International Ladies' Garment Workers Union accused the C. I. O.-affiliated Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America yesterday of "waging open warfare upon our union."

President David Dubinsky and the executive board of the garment workers announced after a meeting here that the garment workers would "resist with all means at their disposal every act of open warfare" from the C. I. O.-affiliate.

Dubinsky's supporters said this was the "first breach between the two garment workers' organizations in 25 years."

They charged the Amalgamated recently had staged an "unjustifiable and deliberate invasion" of the Baltimore and other industries in the New York City area.

Mount Vernon Road Control Being Studied

U. S. Attorneys at Work On Plans to Enforce Law in 'No-Man's-Land'

A solution of the long-standing problem of law enforcement on the Mount Vernon Memorial boulevard is being werked out by Federal officials under leadership of the Justice Department.

The plan calls for prosecution in Virginia State courts of serious offenses committed in the controversial "No-man's-land," Alexander Holtzoff, special assistant to Attorney General Murphy, said yesterday.

Traffic and minor violations, on the other hand, would be tried as convenient, either in the Federal or State courts. They have concurrent jurisdiction in the territory, he explained.

Park Service Police Patrols

The highway now is patrolled by National Park Service police.

"The question under debate," Holtzoff said, "is where to take cases involving arrests on the boulevard."

He drew attention to the recent indictment of James E. Gibson on a charge of criminal assault in the area, and pointed out that Federal District Judge Robert N. Pollard, of the Eastern District of Virginia, quashed the bill for lack of jurisdiction.

"The Justice Department does not question Judge Pollard's ruling and believes the case should be tried in a Virginia court," Holtzoff said. "We are sure the Commonwealth's attorney for Arlington County will cooperate in such cases."

Highway Is Federal

He said the department has offered to surrender the Gibsom case to Virginia authorities for action but added that law enforcement on the boulevard would continue to be the province of the park police.

"Since the highway is Federal property, the park police," Holtzoff asserted, "are under duty to maintain law and order, fix rules and regulations for its use, and prescribe penalties for violations."

Virginia State police, he continued, should aid in maintenance of order near the highway even if jurisdiction over the area is unsettled.

The root of the whole question, he emphasized, is the definition of the District-Virginia boundary as the high-water mark on the Virginia shore. Nobody knows where the legal high-water mark is.

"If ever it is held that the highway is in the District of Columbia, all cases will be tried in District courts," Holtzoff remarked. "All statements necessarily are subject to court decision."

The broad implications of Federal jurisdiction over serious offenses committed on the highway were brought out by defense attorneys in the hearing before Judge Pollard.

Tax Issue Is Involved

"To hold that such lands were in the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States," they argued, "would be a serious and wrongful encroachment upon the sovereignty and a usurpation of the powers of the Commonwealth of Virginia, which might seriously affect the revenues of the State."

A notable taxpayer involved is Washington Airport, which is built on filled land formerly below the Virginia shore high-water mark. The terminal has been paying taxes to Virginia.

A map, dated 1864, shows the high-water mark to be approximately at the Columbia pike. Since that time, however, the river has been pushed back until high-water mark today is beyond the Highway Bridge.

Officials working on the plan to settle jurisdiction are Louis F. Frick, attorney for the National Park Service; M. H. Helter, of the criminal division, Justice Department; United States Attorney Sterling Hutchins, of the Eastern Federal District of Virginia, and Assistant United States Attorney John H. Wilson, of the District of Columbia.

Nino Martini 'Weary' of So Much Travel

NINO MARTINI

Lafayette, La., and New York City take their classical and popular music in equal doses, Nino Martini, fresh from a four-week concert tour, reported yesterday.

A diplomat as well as tenor, Martini declined to compare various sections of the country in "musical sophistication."

"They all love 'O Solo Mio' and 'Donna e Mobile,'" he said, though conceding that "in the smaller places my encores are more likely to be of a popular nature—perhaps something from one of my movies." It was indicated that Washington will have to wait until 4 p. m. today to learn whether this city rates as one of "the smaller places."

The Italian-born star of radio, opera and the movies will appear as soloist in Constitution Hall today with the National Symphony Orchestra.

Martini is a little weary of the open road. "Travel, travel, travel," he sighed yesterday from a sofa in the Mayflower lounge. "I don't know where I live."

The handsome tenor, whose figure is among the trimmest in the operatic world, will rejoin the Metropolitan in New York next week for a seven-week cycle of French and Italian opera.

Plans for the Metropolitan season are still confused by the European war, he said. Several singers in the Italian section, though not of military age, have not been permitted to leave their homeland. Martini, himself an Italian, has no idea why. Martini found Hollywood "very dead" last week, explaining the film capital is suffering from the war's effect on export markets.

Traffic Advisers Urge Restrictions

The Traffic Advisory Council recommended the following restrictions on traffic and parking at its meeting Friday night:

That parking be prohibited on the south side of Cathedral avenue and the west side of Twenty-ninth street; on the south side of Park road from Fourteenth street east to the first driveway; on the west side of Eighteenth street from 7 to 9:30 a. m. between G street and Pennsylvania avenue; and on the west side of Twenty-sixth street between D and F streets northwest; and from 7 to 9:30 a. m. on the north side of B street from First to Second streets southeast, and on the south side of the same street from 4 to 6 p. m.

That G street northeast be made one-way eastbound from Twenty-first to Twenty-fourth street, and H street one-way westbound between the same streets; and Twenty-fourth street one-way northbound from G to H streets northeast.

Massachusetts Span Plan Ready

Bids on the $550,000 Massachusetts avenue bridge over Rock Creek Park will be advertised for tomorrow by the commissioners.

The new span, which will replace the present culvert along Rock Creek and Potomac drive under Massachusetts avenue, will be built of ornamental stone. Opening of bids was set for December 15.

Cosmos Club Searches for New Home Site

U. S. Officially Notifies Group of Desire to Buy Historic Property

Officially notified that the United States Government wants to buy its historic property at Madison place and H street northwest, the Cosmos Club has its board of management casting about for a new location.

Strong sentiment in the club is running toward renting the old Hageman house near the Hay Adams House on Sixteenth street, it was learned yesterday.

Meanwhile, the club's approximately 1,900 members, aware for months of the Government's desire to obtain the Madison place property, have been notified that a general membership meeting will be called "at the earliest practicable date" to hear recommendations from the board of management.

The club, in the official notification, was told that the Public Buildings Administration has an allotment of money including $1,000,000 for purchase of the club's land and improvements.

General Meeting Called

This brought the matter to a show-down on the club and resulted in the call for the general meeting—which officials yesterday said they hoped would be by December 1.

There is a division of sentiment within the club over a new location for the historic organization that counts its years back to 1886 in the Madison place house.

Many members, it was disclosed yesterday, want the club continued downtown, in its present area. One bloc wants it farther out, possibly on the outer reaches of Sixteenth street.

Some want a small house, possibly with a garden; others have declared themselves for a structure larger than the present club. "There is no unanimity of feeling about it," one official said yesterday.

There also is one bloc of members who for sentimental reasons don't want to sell the present holding at all. And another still would hold back on obtaining a best possible price.

The board, it was understood, has considered several properties in the area of the present club during its survey, preceding a recommendation to the membership.

The Hageman house is owned by the Government and controlled by the Library of Congress Trust Fund Board. Cosmos Club officials, speaking as such, said that there could be no developments until the general membership meeting.

Officially, it was emphasized that the club can remain in its present place. It does not have to sell, it was said.

The Government has not announced to what use it would put the Cosmos property.

Cameraman Catches Washingtonians at Play

The photographer paid a few calls last night and everywhere he found laughter and fun. First stop was at the Alabama State Society dance at the Shoreham, where he caught "some folks from home" (upper left). Greeting each other are (left to right) Hugh G. Grant, Minister to Albania; Allen Crenshaw, president of the society; Mrs. Robert Stiles, Mary Ballenger and Barbara Durfee. Continuing his round, our cameramen stopped briefly at the dance held by the Washington School for Secretaries at the Carlton Hotel, and he was rewarded by an informal shot (upper right) of Dorothy Dowdy, Powhatan Baber and Jule Paine, seated, and Martha Ferguson and David Turner, standing. Reluctantly tearing himself away from that gaiety, the picture man dropped in at the Oklahoma State Society dance at the Hay-Adams Hotel where he snapped attractive Virginia Walker and Bob Henning (lower left) as they waltzed. Then our photographer resumed his wandering, arriving at the American Legion dance at the May flower just in time to get in on a joke told by Samuel Gompers (lower right). Judging from the expressions on the faces of Della Laurence and W. F. Wixon, it was a whopper that Gompers is pointing out.

Justice Butler's Rites Postponed Hour and Half

St. Paul, Nov. 18 (AP).—A change in funeral arrangements to provide for a period during which the public may view the body of United States Supreme Court Justice Pierce Butler, who died in Washington Thursday, was announced today.

The public funeral services will be held at 10:30 a. m. (C. S. T.) Monday in St. Luke's Catholic Church, instead of at 9 a. m. as originally planned.

The body will lie in state from 8 a. m. to 10 a. m. in the rotunda of the State Capitol. A military guard will be provided. All State and other public offices here will be closed Monday morning.

Accompanied by his family and Supreme Court Justices McReynolds, Stone and Roberts, the body was to arrive here late today.

Rites Tomorrow For Mrs. Fegan

Services for Mrs. Cecily Fegan, 85, a resident of this city for 55 years, will be at 9 a. m. tomorrow at the home of her son, John J. Fegan, 3307 Upland terrace northwest. They will be followed by requiem mass at the Church of the Blessed Sacrament and burial in Mount Olivet Cemetery.

Mrs. Fegan died Friday at the home of her son. She was the widow of David S. Fegan, and a native of Torquay, England. She leaves another son, David B. Fegan, and a daughter, Mrs. Winifred Hockman, of Cambridge, Mass.

Maj. Wilson, First Army Flying Instructor, Dies

Los Angeles, Nov. 18 (AP).—Maj. Earl Hill Wilson, 58, circus performer, veterans of two wars and first United States Army flying instructor, died today.

Born at Cumberland, Md., Wilson ran away from home at 13 and joined a circus. He rode an elephant 1,500 miles across India, from Calcutta to Bombay.

Although under age, he enlisted in the Army Signal Corps in the Spanish-American war. Later he completed a medical course in Chicago, but soon left his practice to go with Theodore Roosevelt on a hunting trip to Africa.

In 1911 Wilson won an army commission and was credited with flying the first Army plane. Lightning struck his ship in flight and for three years he was paralyzed.

In the World War he was with the Royal Flying Corps and was credited with downing seven enemy planes.

150 Named Area Chiefs For '40 Census

C. R. Brown Heads D. C. Unit; Mrs. K. G. Parker To Be Assistant

The men and women, 150 of them, who will be overseers of the 1940 census, were named yesterday.

Census Director William L. Austin announced appointment of 150 area managers and assistants at salaries ranging from $175 to $350 per month. At the same time he made public their assignments at 105 control points scattered throughout the country.

G. R. Brown was named area manager for the District of Columbia and Mrs. Katherine G. Parker assistant manager. The two control points in Virginia will be headed by C. E. Stuart, at Richmond, and M. Shearer, Roanoke. Details of the Maryland organization have not been completed.

All but 35 of the appointees were brought to the Capital from their homes to take an intensive six-week training course. The 35 who were excused are regular Census Bureau employes who have been assigned to larger metropolitan areas or "open spots" direct from Washington.

About 50 additional assistant area managers remain to be named, said Austin. They will be trained locally by the managers named yesterday.

Roosevelt High Students Star on Radio Workshop

aminations to prove their prowess as magicians. In Dr. Evans' case, however, this requirement was waived becouse of his wide reputation of a sleight of hand artist and student of the occult.

He is regarded as the leading authority in the United States on the history and psychology of conjuring and magic. His latest publication, which appeared this year, is a brochure entitled "Edgar Allan Poe and Baron von Kempelen's Chess-Playing Automaton."

Dr. Evans is a native of Baltimore but has lived in Washington since 1887. He and Mrs. Evans make their home at 3300 Sixteenth street northwest. He was educated at Georgetown Preparatory School, Columbian College (now George Washington University) and the University of Maryland law school.

He was a newspaperman for several years before entering Government service and was a member of The Washington Post staff in the 1890's.

Last night's testimonial dinner and initiation were held at the Occidental Hotel.

Mrs. Pflieger, 93, Dies; Resident Of D.C. 74 Years

Mrs. Margaretha B. Pflieger, 93, a resident of Washington for 75 years, died yesterday at her home, 1219 Vermont avenue northwest.

Born in Germany, she came to Washington at the age of 18. In 1867 she married Christian Pflieger, District merchant, who died 42 years ago. For many years she was an active member of the St. John's Lutheran Church of Southwest Washington and the Ladies Aid Society.

Surviving are nine children, 25 grandchildren and six great-grandchildren, all of Washington. The children are Mrs. Carl Schafer, Mrs. Louis Dorsch, Mrs. Leaven Barrett, Miss Bertha Pflieger, Carl, William, August, Henry and John Pflieger.

Funeral services will be tomorrow at 3 p. m. from Hysong's funeral home, 1300 N street northwest, with interment in Prospect Hill Cemetery.

Pianos Wanted At St. Elizabeths, Says Red Cross

The District Chapter of the Red Cross has issued a call for at least three used upright pianos for the recreation department at St. Elizabeths Hospital.

Roosevelt High Students Help Chest Campaign With Program

The Student Radio Workshop last night was devoted to the Washington Community Chest drive.

Outstanding talent of Roosevelt High School, engaged in the third Workshop program sponsored by The Washington Post and WJSV, wove their half hour on the air around a statement by Miss Grante Singer.

"We school girls and boys are interested in the success of the Community Chest because it makes this city in which we live and where we shall some day found homes of our own, a better place to live. When we think of the health and hope and happiness that is provided by our gifts to the Chest, it is easy to give and be thankful we can," she said.

Several Chest agencies drew mention from the students, whose program, incidentally, is their own creation in every workshop.

Marie Louise Ralph, a tall girl with a pleasant voice, was speaking against the off-stage murmuring:

"This is a program dedicated to the Washington Community Chest, because Roosevelt students are interested in the great good the Chest does in our city through welfare and charitable organizations. Each number on our program will be dedicated to some appropriate Chest agency," she said.

Before this prologue the WJSV announcer had spotted well-known students. "There's Richard Carson, president of the Boys' Glee Club—and that looks like Leroy Peck, manager of the student stage crew over there in the corner."

The program swung in. First, the Boys Glee Club, under direction of Miss Emma Louise Thompson, sang "The Little Red Drum." That, said Miss Ralph, is dedicated to the Boy Scouts of America. Robert Holmes was at the piano.

Then the boys, numbering about 15, sang "Old Man Noah," a rollicking tune with tongue-tying phrases.

"Can you guess to whom it is dedicated?" inquired Miss Ralph. "The Washington Animal Rescue League."

The next was "My Curly Headed Baby," sung by Mary Jane Snyder as the one solo of the Workshop. Miss Snyder also had a leading role in a moment of amateur dramatics.

"We dedicate that number to all those agencies that take care of babies; little folks who haven't homes or families of their own to love them," Miss Ralph explained.

Story of Victor Hugo

To Catholic Charities next was dedicated a dramatization of the story of "The Bishop's Candlesticks" from Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables."

The lines were given in English translation, but just before the Christmas holidays, the students, members of the French Department at the school, will present the play in French. The lines given in English last night were calculated to prepare all the students for a better understanding of the play.

In the cast were Jonn Yeatman, as the bishop; Mary Jane Snyder, as the bishop's sister; Berel Firestone, as Jean Valjean; Mildred Spencer, as Madame Magloire; and William Eisenacher, as the sergeant of police.

This concluded, Frieda Bass played Chopin's Nocturne in F major, with a dedication to the Child Welfare Society.

The Girls' Glee Club sang "In a Country Garden," dedicating the number to the Children's Country Home on Bunker Hill road. The singers were directed by Miss Clara Burroughs.

Then the two glee clubs combined, and hummed out the program with their school song.

The Board of Education cooperates with The Post and WJSV in the Workshop programs. Students of the schools appear each Saturday evening, from 7 to 7:30 o'clock. Next week pupils from Armstrong High School take over the program.

Marriage Health Law, Club Topic

The "Pros and Cons of Health Legislation for Marriage" will be discussed by Dr. William F. Snow, general director, American Social Hygiene Association, at a meeting of the Washington Mondya Evening Club at 8 p. m. tomorrow in the Y. W. C. A.

Twenty-nine States now have laws requiring physicians' certificates indicating freedom from communicable syphilis as a prerequisite to the issuance of marriage licenses.

The Washington Board of Trade and the local Social Hygiene Society have urged consideration of such a law for Washington. The District Health Department has drafted a bill.

Associated Gas Output

New York, Nov. 18.—For the week ended November 10, Associated Gas & Electric System and the New England Gas and Electric Association group report net electric output of 107,207,555 units. This is an increase of 15,652,191 units or 17.1 per cent above production of 91,555,364 units for a year ago.

Union Council Backs Third Term

New York, Nov. 18 (AP).—President Roosevelt was indorsed today as "the logical candidate" for a third term by the New York State Industrial Union Council, representing 900,000 C. I. O. unionists.

Many of the 500 delegates, in heated debate, indicated their unwillingness to support the resolution until it had been determined whether this country was to remain out of the European war.

The resolution termed the President a man who "on his record has done the most to advance the cause of social progress."

Surplus Farm Labor

Government researchers have decided that one of the serious surpluses of agriculture is labor. A WPA study of farm-city migration, made public yesterday by Commissioner F. C. Harrington, concluded that the Nation's farms now have at least 2,500,000 persons who must find city jobs.

War in Europe: 'Quiet' Read the Commiques From All Fronts

Behind the Lines—Germany Executes Czech Students

By Edward T. Folliard.

The man who got the biggest headlines in London last week was not Adolf Hitler, but Alphonse Capone. That ought to indicate how dull the war had become.

The eleventh week of a war that some believed would "end western civilization" probably saw fewer men killed than were "rubbed out" by Chicago machine gunners in the days of Czar Capone's reign.

Why the lull in the fighting? In the case of the war on land, the answer is not difficult: The French and British seem committed to a defensive war on the Western Front, and the Germans are not willing to pay the blood price of a frontal assault against the Maginot Line.

In the case of sea warfare, it does not seem that the Germans are doing all they might do. The British concede that two German pocket battleships, the Admiral Scheer and the Deutschland, are prowling the seas as raiders. But when are they going to start raiding on a large scale?

In the air, the Germans are obviously holding back. Such raids as they have made against Britain have been hardly more than reconnaisance flights. Not yet has Field Marshal Goering taken the wraps off his air fleet.

As the Military Experts See It

Why? What is the answer?

One possible answer—and it may onl ybe a part answer—is offered by military men to whom this reporter has talked.

To the mthe decision of the Germans not to fight (as they put it) is the most important development of the war. If this sounds paradoxical, let us hurry on to their way of reasoning.

As they see it, Germany is holding off from large-scale warfare for the simple reason that Nazi leaders are still convinced that they can win some kind of a decent peace. Nothing is being done now by Germany that might endanger the chances of a peace conference.

Would this mean that Germany is now convinced that she could not beat the Allies? It might mean that, but then again it might not. The military men this reporter has talked to are the last men in the world to pretend that they know all the answers, and they would not try to answer that question.

But looking over the panorama of this strangest of wars, noting the stalemate on land, the falling off of action on the seas and the near idleness in the air, they can reach only one deduction: That the Nazi high-command still is convinced that the war can be ended around the conference table.

These students of the art of warfare see no likelihood of any major action on the Western Front in the near future, and even less likelihood of any air raids on London or Paris.

The scene of action in the eleventh week of the war was behind the lines, in Germany's proctectorate of Bohemia-Moravia, heart of what was once the thriving democracy of Czecho-Slovakia.

For staging "demonstrations," nine Czech students were shot to death by rifle squads. Czech universities were closed for three years, and a total of 1,200 students, both boys and girls, were taken away to a place of exile.

The blood-letting in Prague recalls the "demonstrations" of Konrad Henlein, the petit Hitler of Czecho-Slovakia, who paved the way for dismemberment of the republic. He formed a semi-military corps in the Sudeten area, he demanded autonomy for the Germans in that area, and he delivered "ultimatums" to the Czecho-Slovak government. Finally, although the Czech government called out no firing squads against Henlein, Fuehrer Hitler found the situation intolerable, and moved in.

The "demonstrations" that caused all the trouble in Prague last week began late in October when Czech patriots celebrated the twenty-first anniversary of the founding of the Czecho-Slovak Republic. Many of them wore black arm bands.

Just how serious the uprisings were could not be determined. The news that nine students had been shot to death and that the universities had been closed for three years was of German origin, broadcast by the official Nazi news service. This service, DNB, announced on Friday:

"For some time a group of Czech intellectuals assoicated with the fugitive former President Benes have sought to disturb the peace and order in the protectorate of Bohemia-Moravia with greater or smaller demonstrations of resistance.

Papers Fell For Propaganda

"Investigation established that leaders in these acts of resistance were to be found particularly in colleges and academies.

"In consequence of the fact that on October 8 and November 15, these elements assaulted individual Germans, Czech academies have been closed for three years, nine perpetrators were shot and a large number of participants arrested."

In the early days of this war, the British Ministry of Information put out a story about uprisings in Czecho-Slovakia. American newspapers used it, and then regretted that they had. Apparently they had fallen for a piece of propaganda.

Dr. Joseph Goebbels, the Nazi propaganda minister, organized an inspection tour of former Czech territory, and 27 foreign newspaper reporters were taken along to see that all was serene in what once was Czechia: Some saw serenity; some saw sullen but masked hatred of the Teuton invaders. None saw any signs of armed revolt.

In the meantime, the Czecho-Slovak National Council of America, with headquarters in Chicago, was sending out weekly news releases telling of intolerable conditions in the homeland. Not many newspapers printed these releases. They were frankly Czech propaganda.

The Czechs Tell Their Story

Now that the official German news agency has been quoted, it seems only fair to quote from a news release sent out last week by the council that is working for Czecho-Slovakia's restoration. This release embodies a letter sent to the 27 foreign correspondents that Goebbels herded into Bohemia-Moravia, and is said to have been circulated by a secret Czech organization.

"In view of the fact that our own journalists had no opportunity to inform you of the true state of affairs," says the letter, dated Prague, September 23, "we shall attempt to do so in writing . . ."

"We shall attempt to point out the suffering of our people, and the innumerable cruelties of our Teuton 'protectors.'

"Do you know that during the period from March 15 to the end of August of this year, 42,000 Czechs were imprisoned by the German authorities? And that these were followed by an additional 18,000 since the first of September?

"Do you know that these victims were dragged away into the Dachu and other concentration camps, without any opportunity of defense, and that they were thrown upon the mercy of the brutal Gestapo?

"Do you know that thousands of these victims are being tortured and mutilated by the sadistic, bestial methods of the Gestapo?

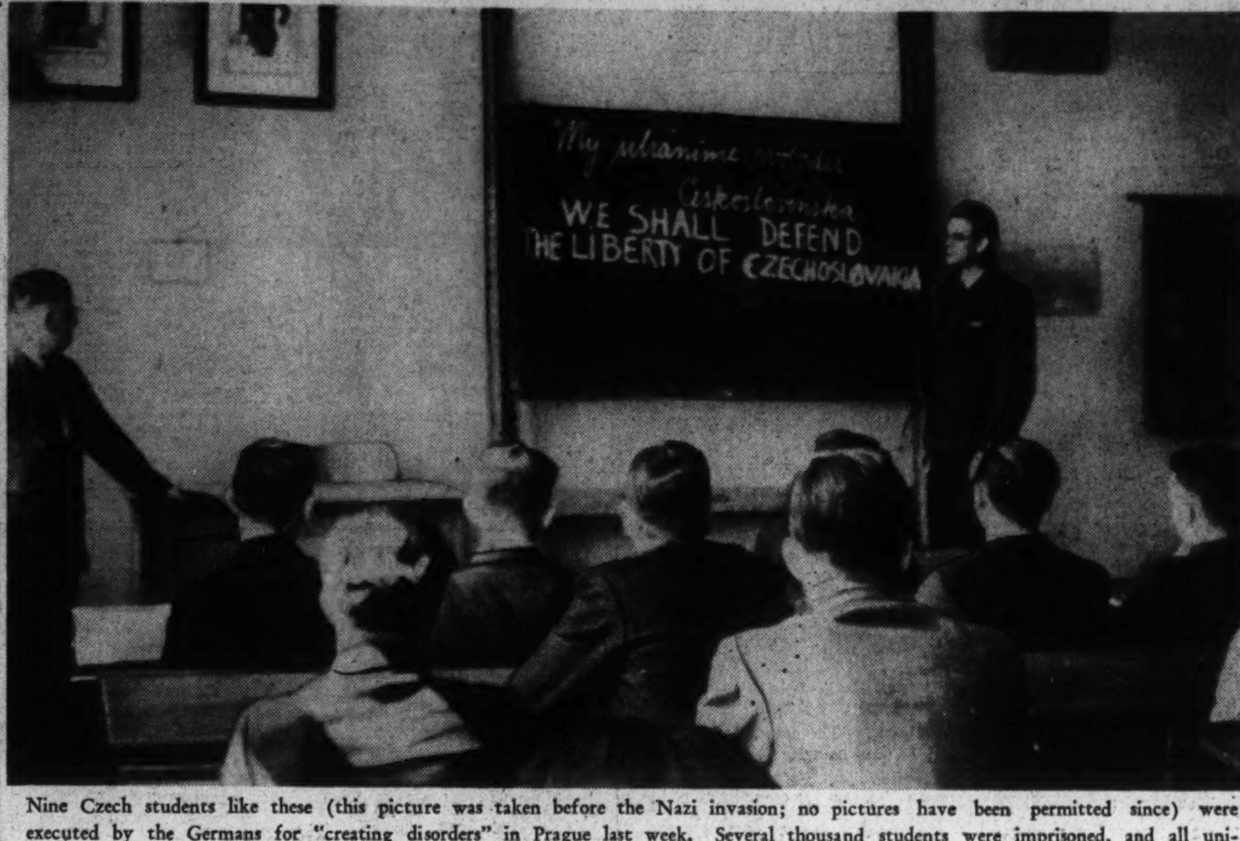
"And do you know that among these victims are churchmen of varying ranks, writers—some of them of world renown—members of parliament, senators, former ministers, professors, teachers, mayors, members of civil or public governments, outstanding members of the Sokol organization, former legionnaires, and outstanding representatives of our industrial and economic life as well as plain men of the street, workmen, businessmen, farmers and others?

"And do you know that in the 'eternally German' city of Brno, 22,140 school children have just registered in the Czech schools as against 3,559 in the German schools—and this in spite of the terrific terrorism and pressure of the German authorities?

"Do you know that the solution of the so-called 'Jewish question' is being undertaken by the German, not the Czech authorities; and that by means of such illegal 'aryanizations' of all Jewish enterprises, the Germans have developed a powerful means of merciless Germanization of purely Czech districts where no Jewish property is permitted to pass into Czech hands, but only into German hands.

"And do you know that German has become the only official language which alone can be used in dealings with the German authorities? And did you notice that even in the street cars and autobusses in Prague, a strictly Czech city, the conductors are required under severe penalty to call the street names first in German and only secondarily in Czech? . . ."

The author of that letter, if he is still alive, ought to have a hair-raising story to tell when he smuggles out his account of the recent "demonstrations" and rifle squad executions.



WE SHALL DEFEND THE LIBERTY OF CZECHOSLOVAKIA

Nine Czech students like these (this picture was taken before the Nazi invasion; no pictures have been permitted since) were executed by the Germans for "creating disorders" in Prague last week. Several thousand students were imprisoned, and all universities closed by Nazi order.

Churchill Assumes Offensive in the 'War of Words'

The summary for the eleventh week of the war:

Land

Adolf Hitler, in firing Gen. von Blomberg and Gen. von Fritsch before the Austrian "putsch," took over command of the German army. The day he started into Poland he called himself the "First Soldier" of the Reich.

Military men, as has been noted many times before, have wondered from the outset just how far Hitler would go in trying to decree Nazi strategy. In the past week, there have been reports from several quarters of serious dissension between First Soldier Hitler and the German general staff.

One such report came from London, which fact would brand it either as propaganda or wishful thinking. However, there also was an intimation of internal bickering from Berlin.

The London version, admittedly nothing more than a deduction, is that the German generals never wanted to fight the war on the Western Front and told Hitler so. Hitler, according to the British, told them he was not asking them to fight in the West, and then ordered them to clean up Poland.

"At first it looked as though he (Hitler) was completely right because the Allies could not help Poland, but later the German army found themselves settled down to positional warfare with the British navy behind it.

"They have now gone to Hitler and said in effect, 'Now look what we are in for.'"

From Berlin came a dispatch saying that "the conservative army command flatly refused" to countenance a German invasion of the Netherlands, presumably lest it arouse neutral opinion to such a pitch that Germany's sources of supply might be seriously impaired.

Hitler Not Living Up to Reputation

Whatever be the merit of these reports, one observation seems to be in order: Adolf Hitler certainly is not living up to his reputation in this war. John Gunther, in his "Inside Europe," said that Hitler was a "whole hogger or nothing." Therefore to see him boondoggling, as at present, is a strange spectacle indeed.

Sea

The speedy, far-ranging German pocket battleship, Admiral Scheer, was reported to have sunk a British tanker off East Africa last week. The tanker was the Africa Shell, a vessel of only 706 tons.

Because of the small size of the ship, some naval experts, both here and in London, doubted whether th Admiral Scheer was responsible. They did not think she would betray her position for such a minor prize. Therefore they concluded that the raider was probably an armed German merchant ship.

However, few doubt that the Admiral Scheer and the Deutschland (which captured the City of Fline) are on the high seas. The British Admiralty has announced as much. What puzzles naval men is why they don't ride the traffic lanes and sink some ships.

The City of Flint unloaded her cargo in Bergen, Norway, and prepared to start home light. Apparently the maneuver was satisfactory to both the United States and Germany, the foreign office of the Reich sending assurances that Nazi U-boats would not attempt to molest the American freighter on her way home. State Department officials, however, were not likely to forget soon how Soviet Russia acted in the incident.

Great Britain lost her fifth warship since the outbreak of the war. A destroyer, name not given, struck a German mine while on submarine patrol. One sailor lost his life, 15 were injured and 5 were reported missing.

The toll of tropedoed ships during the week, like that of the two previous weeks, was far below that of the early weeks of the war.

Air

The first German air bombs to strike British soil in this war landed last week on the Shetland Islands, Britain's northernmost possession in Europe, 600 miles from Germany.

The bombs, according to the British Air Ministry, landed among the cottages of Shetland peasants, but did no damage. Four German planes took part in the raid, and apparently were out to damage ships anchored among the more than 100 isles and islets.

The fact that attack and pursuit planes cannot accompany the big German bombers on their long-distance raids has been suggested as one reason why Goering hasn't sent his air fleet to the British Isles in force. The smaller attack and pursuit ships, which use an enormous amount of gasoline for their size, can travel only about half as far as the big bombers.

However, air experts here do not think this is the sole reason that the Nazis are refraining from raids on a large scale. They grant that it would be a big advantage to have the attack and pursuit planes along as a protection to the bombers. But the bombers, they add, undoubtedly could de a large amount of damage without such protection. Of course, there would be heavy losses among the bombers, they say, but that would have to be expected in any event.

Diplomacy

The Belgium-Netherlands peace appeal appeared to be definitely a failure last week. There was talk about doors being left open, but the fact remained that no one of the belligerents gave King Leopold and Queen Wilhelmina any encouragement.

King George VI referred the Belgian and Dutch rulers to pronouncements already made by Prime Minister Chamberlain and Foreign Secretary Halifax, who had said that Germany had to do right by Czecho-Slovakia and Poland before peace talk could be entertained.

That Was Enough For Hitler

President Lebrun of France went further. He said that no durable peace could come until the "injustitces" done to Austria, as well as Czecho-Slovakia and Poland, had been repaired.

This kind of talk was enough for Hitler. He, too, turned down the Belgian-Dutch offer, saying the British and French answers had made the proposal impossible.

In the matter of hard-boiled talk, the Allies, in the person of Winston Churchill, British Lord of the Admiralty, took the initiative away from the Nazi word-slingers. Churchill called Hitler an "evil man," a "cornered maniac," and he revived the old 1914-1918 label, "Huns."

The Finns walked out on the Russians, refusing to accede to demands that would make their republic a Soviet protectorate.

Meantime, a new champion of the Finns came to the forefront—Benito Mussolini. Through his controlled press, Il Duce assailed Russia for picking on the Finns.

Was Rome thus voicing indignation that Berlin also felt, but dared not express?

Even Christmas Cards Controlled

London, Nov. 18.—Spies will find it difficult to use Christmas cards for sending messages out of Great Britain this year, because of an ingenious control system which has been introduced by the Department of Military Censorship.

Britons who wish to send cards to certain "censorable countries"—including most of Europe, China, Japan and the overseas possessions of neutral European nations—must place their orders with a stationer and give him the list of names and addresses of those people to whom cards are to be sent. The stationer then himself will address and mail the cards.

This control was thought necessary because during the last war enemy agents made extensive use of greeting cards to convey information to Germany by way of neutral countries.

No Fox Hunting On British Front

London, Nov. 18.—This war does not measure up to the last one, from the sportsman's point of view, in the opinion of British veterans who are once again serving at the front. Disgruntled letters reaching London point out that there is now not one pack of fox hounds attached to the fighting forces in France.

During the winter of 1914, a veteran recalled, there was some excellent hunting with a pack of hounds for the Second Cavalry Brigade. When a stop was put to this by peasants who objected to having their fields galloped over, interregimental polo was organized. This sporting activity also was checked in its infancy.

The British horsemen had to content themselves with unofficial point-to-point meetings. These were "winked" at by the commanding officers.

Questioned About a Third Term Mr. Jefferson Said 'No'

By Robert C. Albright.

KING GEORGE

He turned down the Belgian-Dutch peace plea.

"That I should lay my charge at a proper period is as much a duty as to have borne it faithfully."

Historians digging back into Jeffersoniana found that root of Amarica's "no third term" doctrine in the third President's writtings at President Roosevelt laid the cornerstone of the Thomas Jefferson memorial. It may be revived frequently in the coming campaign to taunt the President should he shatter the Jefferson precedent and seek office again.

Fun poked by the President at third term speculation contributed to a growing belief in Washington that the President instead will rededicate the two-term tradition as forcefully as did Jefferson, and some even were looking to the anniversary of the second President's declaration for a clue. Jefferson made the statment on Dcember 10, 1807, after legislatures of six States had passed resolution favoring a third term.

What Jefferson Said

Said Jefferson:

"If some termination to the services of the chief magistrate be not fixed by the Constitution, or supplied by practice, his office, nominally for years, will in fact become for life. Believing that a representative Government, responsible at short periods of election, is that which produces the greatest sum of happines to mankind, I feel it is a duty to do no act which shall essentially impair that principle; and I should unwillingly be the person who, disregarding the sound precedent set by an illustrious predecessor, should furnish the example of prolongation beyond the second term of office."

Washington, who refused to take a third term, did so for personal reasons of retirement, and made no effort to establish this as a preredent. John Adams, who followed, was a one-term President.

But Jefferson, who came next, had strong convictions against long continuation in office, and sought vainly to amend the Constitution to limit the Presidency to a single term of seven years.

Some Republican campaigners, unsure as yet of the President's third term intentions, and less sure of the much-prophecied Democratic convention split, are keeping a weather eye toward Europe's war. Therein—in its day-by-day developments, early termination or long continuation—may lie the political key to the 1940 election padlock, these believe.

One influentian and informed G. O. P. leader, who is not in the orthodox party center, put it this way:

It All Depends on the War

"For the time being at least, what will happen at the polls in 1940 is largely out of our hands as a party and out of Democratic control as a party. It is mostly dependent on what happens overseas.

"If the war ends this winter or in the spring, I don't believe the President will show the remotest interest in another term. There would be the inevitable reaction on business, prices and employment in this country. Conditions in November would not be propitious for any Democratic candidate. A good Republican candidate could win easily.

"If the war continues, we may have another set of domestic conditions. Business is improving, profits are being shared, and this would continue. I personally believe the President would permit his name to be placed in nomination if that is the case. I think he would be nominated. And he might be hard to defeat."

Most Republican regulars believe the President will run in 1940 in any event. Most impartial Washington political observers believe he will not in any event. Aside from the extreme New Deal element, most Democratic Party regulars willing to express an opinion, believe he will not. There may be an element of wishful thinkers in each case. But while the President keeps his own counsel, none can know. And until the third term query is answered, no effective campaign strategy can be laid down by either party.

As party plans and the programs of individual aspirants for office cannot wait either on the war's outcome or the President's decision, the few Republicans contestants who are now taking the stump or planning to, are seeking the advice of astute party counselors.

G. O. P. liberal wing would mark a change in the Republican campaign approach. First, the Republican stumpers would rid themselves of the notion that they have a 1940 walk-away. Second, they would pay less lip service to big business and business ills. (They have the business vote and support in the bag anyway). Third, they would direct their appeals to the same mass groups from which the Democratic Party drew its 1932 and 1936 landslides, and not threaten to scuttle all New Deal reforms.

One course of action known to have been advised by a sage of the

The farmer would be wooed again by kind words about the soil conservation program and benefit payments, though the added parity price bounty would be soft-pedaled. The colored vote, once Republican for the asking, would be realistically courted again by promises to do something for the colored population on a par with what the Democratic Party has offered—promises of jobs. To the working man they would offer a program untinged by any stamp of reaction.

Advice or none, candidates as usual will shape individual campaigns to their particular ends. Elections are still a year off. But it is speech-making time on the hustings, and each speech that is made will be planing down planks for a party platform.

Party leaders who shortly will be thumbing over convention bids of key cities, should first consult James D. Preston, assistant administrative secretary of the National Archives, on precedents.

"Sunny Jim," superintendent of the Senate press gallery for many years and later Senate librarian, is compiling a record of national convention facts and figures that should make nearby Baltimore nostalgic with memory of past political grandeur and pop buttons on Chicago's bulging vest.

Only 15 cities have cradled national conventions in this Nation's political span, and Baltimore is second from the top in the number held there, with 17. But all, save the 1912 Democratic Convention, were held in the last century. The Democratic Party's first national convention was held in the Maryland city in 1832.

Chicago Heads the List

Chicago heads the list with 18 conventions—nine of them in the last quarter of a century. St. Louis comes next, with six to its credit, while Philadelphia, where the first Republican Convention was held, is fourth, with five. New York trails far down with but two.

Other convention cities were Cincinnati, four; Cleveland, three;

and one apiece for Charleston, Denver, Harrisburg, San Francisco.

Compared with the vast auditorium space seating thousands now demand a convention prerequisite, Preston found that many of the early conventions were held in churches or in small halls seating as few as 500. The Democrats' first national convention in Baltimore was held in the Universalist Church, seating 1,200, after Athenaeum building proved too small. First Republican Convention in Philadelphia was held in the small Music Fund hall.

Slight Majority of Voters Favor a Democrat for President in 1940

But G. O. P. Strength Increases in Month

Survey Shows That 18 States Hold Key to Election at Present Time; South and West Democratic

By Dr. George Gallup

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., Nov. 19.—As the political experts search the November election figures for portents of the country's attitude next fall, a Nation-wide survey by the American Institute of Public Opinion indicates that a slight majority of American voters at this time favor a Democratic President in 1940, but that the number has declined sharply during the last month.

GALLUP

At the present time, the survey shows, the Democrats are well ahead in the South and West, the Republicans lead in New England, and an important band of 18 Northern States remain politically "on the fence." One of the most striking facts revealed in the survey is that—despite the defeat of the "Ham-and-Eggs" pension plan, which some observers regarded as a sign of a conservative shift in the West—the Pacific and the Western States in general are still strongly pro-Democrat.

A month ago, at the height of the neutrality debate, the Institute found 57 per cent of the voters in a Nation-wide cross-section in favor of a Democratic victory. From this and other indications of political sentiment it appears that the Democratic fortunes are decidedly on the rise.

And yet, as today's survey reveals, Democratic party strength may have reached its high-tide for 1939 at that time. In the weeks since the ending of the neutrality session the trend has been in the direction of the G. O. P. In both surveys the Institute asked a carefully selected cross-section of the voting population in each State:

"Which party would you like to see win the Presidential election in 1940?"

Majority Still for Democratic Victory

The trend of opinion, as shown in the votes of those who have made up their minds on the question, is:

MONTH AGO

Want Democrats to Win..	57%
Want Republicans to Win	43%

TODAY

Want Democrats to Win..	54%
Want Republicans to Win	46%

Expressed in politicians' terms, the survey indicates that the Democratic Party is stronger than it was a year ago, when it dropped approximately 80 Congressional seats to the Republicans, but not as strong as in 1936 when 62.5 per cent of the major party voters cast their ballots for President Roosevelt.

The war in Europe and the popularity of F. D. R.'s foreign policy have undoubtedly helped to bolster the Democratic Party's position at this time. Seven months ago, with the Nation embroiled in domestic issues, a small majority (52 per cent) said they favored a Republican President in 1940.

Will the opening of the political campaign and the return to domestic problems reverse the picture again? That is the prime political question for the immediate future, as Senator Taft, Thomas E. Dewey, Paul V. McNutt, Vice President Garner and others prepare to open fire for the 1940 nominations. The Institute will conduct audits of national political sentiment as the campaign rolls along.

Survey Gives a Glimpse Of Hamilton's Problem

Today's Institute survey will give political leaders a glimpse of the problems ahead for them. For John D. M. Hamilton and his Republican strategists the 1940 problems seem to be:

(1) To hold the New England States which are predominantly Republican in today's survey, and

(2) To win the lion's share of electrictoral votes from the area between the Hudson River and the Rockies—outside the South. In this band of 18 States, accounting for 279 of the Nation's 531 electoral votes, average opinion is now very evenly divided, the survey shows.

The "Solid South" gives every indication at this time that it intends to remain solidly Democratic in 1940. With more than three Southerners in every four favoring a Democrat in today's survey, it does not seem that the Republican high command can hope to gain electoral votes in this region.

To the Democratic block must also be added the West at this time, where 59 per cent of the voters in the survey say they favor a Democratic President in 1940.

Section by section the average in today's survey is:

41	New Eng. St.	44%	56%
118	Mid. Atl. St.	51	49
88	East Cent. St.	50	50
73	West Cent. St.	51	49
146	Southern St...	77	23
65	Western St...	59	41
531

The Institute found approximately one voter in every five undecided on the question or deliberately postponing his decision until after the candidates are named next June.

Key to Election May Be 18 'Borderline' States

With the South and the West predisposed to favor a Democrat (total of 211 electoral votes in the two areas), the problem of Jim Farley and the Democratic board of strategy seems to center in the same "borderline belt" where the Republicans have the most at stake. The area includes both predominantly industrial States and predominantly farming States. Here, unless all signs fail, will be the battleground of the 1940 elections.

An interesting sidelight is the fact that the three top-ranking Republican candidates in Institute popularity tests—Thomas E. Dewey, Senator Vandenberg and Senator Taft—all come from States in this political arena. On the other hand, of the leading Democratic eligibles, only President Roosevelt and Paul V. McNutt, of Indiana represent this general area, while Vice President Garner and Secretary of State Cordell Hull come from the "Solid South."

Whether the factor of birthplace will be of prime concern in the 1940 elections is impossible to forecast, of course. Nevertheless, it is one of the factors which political leaders traditionally weigh.

Far more important in recent national elections has been the general temper of the American people and the degree of peace and prosperity existing at the time of the election. These considerations—plus the actual choice of party candidates in June—must continue to be the "X" factors in political speculation.

F. D. R., Vandenberg 'Who's Who' Choices

If President Does Not Run Members of Group Show Preference for Secretary Of State Hull, Survey Reports

By American Institute of Public Opinion.

Princeton, N. J., Nov. 19.—During the next few months political forecasters will turn their telescopes on virtually every important voting group in the country—farmers, businessmen, organized labor and so on—with a view to 1940 prognostication.

One of the most interesting groups in American life, however, is a group seldom examined by the experts—the several thousand doctors, lawyers, merchants, teachers and preachers, leaders in all walks of life, who are included in "Who's Who in America."

AMERICAN INSTITUTE of PUBLIC OPINION

To see whether these prominent citizens view the political scene any differently from the ordinary voter, the American Institute on Public Opinion undertook to ask a representative cross-section of "Who's Who:"

"Whom would you like to see elected President in 1940?"

This was followed by the further question, for those who named Roosevelt,

"If Roosevelt is not a candidate, whom would you like to see elected?"

REPUBLICAN BLOC DEMOCRATIC BLOC
These 18 "borderline" States will be the battleground of the 1940 election.

60% Favor Roosevelt

The replies, tabulated separately for those naming a Democrat and those naming a Republican, show:

1. Among persons favoring a Democrat in 1940, President Roosevelt was named far oftener than any other individual, 60 per cent of those with opinions on the question naming him. While this corresponds roughly to the vote of ordinary Democrats throughout the United States, it is not as high as the 63 per cent who named F. D. R. in the latest nationwide survey.

2. If President Roosevelt does not run in 1940, the three leading choices of "Who's Who" Democrats are Secretary of State Cordell Hull (38 per cent of those with opinions), Vice President Garner (21 per cent) and Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace (6 per cent). In the Institute's nationwide survey of rank-and-file Democrats Mr. Garner led Mr. Hull by a substantial margin, and the name of Paul V. McNutt figured prominently.

3. Among persons favoring a Republican President in 1940, Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg, of Michigan, was first with 26 per cent of the preference vote. Interestingly enough, this is the same percentage Senator Vandenberg received in the latest Institute survey of rank-and-file Republicans, although in the latter survey the percentage was not enough to put him in the lead.

Frenchmen at Front Needn't Worry About Families; Nation Cares for Them

Special Dispatch to The Post

Paris, Nov. 18.—The French soldier at the front in this war will not have to worry about his family as did his predecessor of 1914. A society has been formed to look after the family the poilu has had to leave back home. If his wife is going to have a baby, the soldier will have the assurance that she and her child will be looked after carefully. If he has a father and mother, who have looked to him for support in their old age, the soldier knows that they will not be in want.

The organization that has been formed to care for the dependents of French soldiers is called the "Work of Mutual Assistance in the Army." It was founded in February, 1939, by Prime Minister Edouard Daladier, who also is minister of war. It springs from his knowledge of the needs of the soldier that he acquired in the World War, when he was an infantryman. A society established for this purpose was set up late in the World War, and then it did not discharge its mission efficiently.

The new organization is a sort of "roof" society, uniting the mutual aid societies and military homes that have been operating throughout France and in her overseas colonies. The central society plans to receive funds and allocate them to its branches.

"Foyers Militaires," which correspond roughly to the Y. M. C. A. huts which were set up for American troops, are to be established in every corps of the French Army. These "foyers" will serve as recreation and social centers. They will consist of a recreation hall equipped with billiard tables, wireless sets, gramophones and chess tables, a reading and writing room, barber shop and a hall for theatricals and motion pictures.

Library Uses New Photoduplication Method to Preserve Rare Documents

Authentic Copies Of Old Papers Will Be Available to All

By Joseph Reed

In war or in peace science moves onward. It serves destruction as well as preservation.

In war or in peace nations struggle for existence, and were it not for the recordation of the acts, customs, habits and thoughts of those nations which have ceased to exist, the role which they have taken in the world-order or the contribution they have made to society would be mere legend. Each generation writes its own story, and for the writing and the preservation of that story it owes a debt to science.

For many years libraries, archives, historical societies and similar organizations have been endeavoring to find some scientific method by which documents, books, newspapers, pamphlets and like material could not only be adequately preserved, but also their use expanded. Furthermore when certain books, papers, or documents are held by a given library or archive, and that library or archive is destroyed by fire or misfortunes of war, those records are often sacrificed to posterity. But if these original documents or records have been duplicated then their continued use is assured.

To this task of duplication the science of photography has addressed itself. These are four kinds of "photoduplication," as this new branch of photograph science is called: (1) blueprint for the reproduction of surveys, or drawings made to scale; (2) photography for the duplication of wood-cuts or pictures from rare-books and the like; (3) photostat for the facsimile duplication of printed or written records; and (4) microfilm for the duplication of newspapers, books, manuscripts, or periodicals.

Microfilming a New Process

The first three types are fairly well-known, but the last, microfilming, is rather new. In simple language," microfilming" is the application of the principle of making moving pictures to the extent that the whole page of a book, periodical or newspaper is photographed within a single frame of the film, and as each frame of the film is thrown on the screen a new page appears. The projector is so designed that the reader is enabled to move the film frame by frame, obtaining the same result as that gained by turning a page. The film used is noninflammable, and will last as long as linen paper. Each exposure costs only a few cents.

Microfilming, as one type of photoduplication, has only a wide potential use but also many important advantages. One of the greatest costs with which any library is faced is that of storage and care of books, papers, and other printed or written matter. A second cost is the prevention of deterioration. This is especially true of newspapers. Their rapid deterioration arises from the fact that since 1876 they have been printed on paper made from wood-pulp which drys and crumbles very rapidly. Those papers published prior to that date were printed on rag-paper and do not deteriorate so rapidly. Then too those newspapers printed on wood pulp cannot withstand the continued handling by readers. For instance, it might be noted that newspapers of the World War period are very much in demand now and it is a question whether they can survive this excessive use.

Microfilming not only extends the life of the material covered by a given newspaper, but it relieves the necessity of providing storage space for the ever-growing number of bound volumes. It is estimated that storage space can be reduced to one-two-hundredth part. In the Library of Congress alone there are stored 98,000 volumes of daily and weekly American and foreign newspapers beginning with the earliest publications. This number is being increased at the rate of 2,000 annually. The Library is binding a daily average of 190 daily and 17 weekly American newspapers and 112 daily and 19 weekly foreign newspapers. Every State in the Union is represented in this collection. The number from each States varies from one to five papers. It is obvious, therefore, that expanding storages pace will be required.

Furthermore, to use this unequaled newspaper collection it is necessary to come to Washington, while if the collection were microfilmed positives of the master film (the negative) could be sent to every library, public or private, in the country. Suppose it were necessary to go to Hollywood to see a moving picture. Just as the distribution of motion pictures brings any given picture to the theaters of your own city, by the same manner valuable collections of eighteenth, nineteenth and twentieth century newspapers in the Library of Congress could be brought to your libraries. Since the newspaper is the world's diary, it becomes obvious what it would mean to have this outstanding collection available to readers, students and investigators throughout the United States.

Some cities have recognized the value of microfilming their local papers. They recognize the value of their preservation. Old papers published in such cities as Baltimore, Chicago, Cleveland, Detroit, New York and Boston as well as many of those published in small towns, are being microfilmed.

Such historical societies as the Illinois Historical Society, the Kansas State Historical Society, and the State Historical Society of Missouri have had considerable work done in the matter of microfilming the papers in their respective collections, and in other collections to implement their own. Every library, archive or historical society prides itself on its collection of rare books, original papers and documents, but their use is confined to the organization to which they belong; yet by microfilming them they could be made available to any library anywhere.

Then there is the question of out-of-prnt books. No matter how valuable they may be, their use is likewise restricted to the library which is fortunate in owning one of the fe wremaining copies. Microfilming will extend their circulation. When it is realized what a vast number of books reach the out-of-print status every year this form of duplication answers the pressing need of those libraries which do not have them.

In recognition of this new scientific method of preservation and extention of library materials, the Library of Congress has created a special division called the "Photoduplication Service," which combines the four types of photocopy above mentioned. Its creation represents many years of experiment and technical development.

In 1904 the Manuscript Division of the Library recognized its lack of original and authentic documents and records dealing with the early period of American history—its discovery and colonization. In other words, "the raw material of our colonial history." With limited funds that could be spared efforts were begun to collect duplicates of the original documents concerned in the libraries and archives of England, France, Germany, Austria, Russia and Spain. The limited efforts were continued over a period of 20 years, at the end of which time considerable material had been collected and indexed.

In 1928 Mr. John D. Rockefeller, jr., became interested in the efforts the library was making in this regard and to give vigor to the program, which was even then far from complete, he donated the sum of $450,000 to be spread over a period of five years. A special research group was dispatched abroad to undertake the work on a larger scale than had been hitherto pursued.

It was shortly discovered that securing copies of historical documents by means of handwriting or typewriting not only required careful verification, but even then these transcripts were subject to error. The idea of photographing the originals was tried and out of this period of experimtnation the use of first the photostat and then microfilming

Microfilming has opened a new field for the archivist and librarian, who for years have sought a method of preserving valuable written and printed material, and at the same time has made possible a wider distribution of the same material in authentic form. The Congressional Library is now using microfilm to make permanent records of books, newspapers and pamphlets. At the left is shown the camera; below, the film of a page of The Washington Post is projected for reading purposes, and at the right is pictured the rack, tank developing and drying systems.

was found as the solution of the problem.

As a result of the use of this kind of photoduplication the manuscript division now has an extensive collection of historical documents taken not only from European archives and libraries, but also from those of Mexico and Canada. In other words, historical data has been obtained from all the countries which were concerned in the discovery, colonization and the early development of our Nation.

In 1932, when this special project was completed, the photocopy equipment was sent to the library for storage, but instead of being left idle, the manuscript division set it up in temporary quarters and began to use it to make available to other libraries and institutons, through the process of microfilming, such documents as were called for. The demand grew so rapidly that by 1938 it was evident that better provision would have to be made; in fact, "the library was frequently embarrassed by its inability to provide unlimited quantities of all types of photocopies of materials in its collection."

At this point the Rockefeller Foundation became interested in the work and a grant was made of some $35,000 to equip a thoroughly modern photoduplication laboratory, and to provide the requisite working capital, in the form of a revolving fund, set up pursuant to a provision of the Library of Congress trust board act, a clause of which enabled the librarian of Congress, under certain conditions, to accept private funds for deposit in the United States Treasury and to disburse them in accordance with the terms indicated by the donor."

Filming of A Newspaper

Housed in the basement of the new Library Annex in air-conditioned quarters, the photoduplication laboratory is equipped with three expensive microfilm cameras (see picture), which will produce copies of any type of original matter, including newspapers. "For the latter a bound volume newspaper copying camera is employed." On this machine the sample microfilm in the above picture was taken from a bound volume of The Washington Post of the World War period. The film was then put in a projector and enlarged to the reading size as illustrated.

The calls upon the service for photocopy are varied. Newspapers are in the process of being microfilmed. "Large quantities of contact and enlarged photographic glossy prints for book illustrations and other purposes" are supplied.

War in Europe Strengthens Position of U. S. in Far East Diplomacy

Japan Looks To America For Supplies

Embargo Would Be Serious Matter, Since Warring NationsCan't Share Materials Now

By Hedley Donovan.

Six hundred of the British Durham regiment, their China duty ended, this week will pack pith helmets and sail from Tientsin for Europe. Later this month a detachment will withdraw from the French concession in Tientsin.

A single battalion, retiring from Tientsin or joining the British expeditionary force in France, creates no great stir in headquarters of the Japanese or German general staffs. On the diplomatic front, however, Japanese officials promptly hailed the decision of France and Britain as a major Japanese victory, marking recognition by the West European powers of Japan's "special requirements" in China.

Last Thursday, only four days after Britain announced reduction of the Tientsin garrison to a skeleton force, Yakichiro Suma, Japanese foreign office spokesman, asserted that the United States Government now recognizes "new realities" in the Far East. The statement will not be questioned in Washington. Whether Suma was thinking of the same "new realities" now under discussion in the State Department is another matter.

The 'New Order' And New Realities

For Japan the realities of the Far Eastern situation are summed up in the cherished phrase, "the new order in Eastern Asia." This new order aims at Japanese domination, if not actual sovereignty, over all China.

The new realities, in the eyes of American officials, reveal Japan seriously weakened on the diplomatic front, since outbreak of the European war, and confirm long-standing doubts as to Japanese military strength on the Asiatic mainland.

Mr. Suma's last first-hand encounter with American Far Eastern policy came July 26 when, as counselor of the Japanese Embassy here, he stepped into Secretary Hull's office to receive notice of abrogation of the commercial treaty of 1911. The treaty expires January 26, 1940, and with it the last legal barrier to an embargo on American shipments to Japan.

The threat of economic sanctions against Japan, implicit in Secretary Hull's note of July, inaugurated a six-month "probation period" in Japanese-American relations. Diplomatic activity in Tokyo and Washington, already lively, is expected to grow steadily more intense as the January 26 deadline draws near.

Meanwhile Senator Key Pittman, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, has served notice that he intends to press for action on his resolution empowering the President to impose an embargo on vital shipments to Japan. "Mere adoption" of the measure early in the next Congressional session "is bound to have a salutary effect," he declared 10 days ago. If passage of the resolution is not a sufficiently effective instrument for bargaining with Tokyo, the Senator indicated that he does not shrink from the embargo itself.

Embargo Threat Potent Weapon

The embargo, a serious threat last July, has become a still more potent weapon since Europe went to war. The United States, according to reliable estimates, supplied Japan with approximately 55 per cent of its vital imports during the first two years of the Far Eastern conflict. Another 10 to 12 per cent came from Great Britain. With Britain now consuming all its own war materials, Japan is already feeling the pinch of the European war.

While Europe was at peace there was always the possibility that new supplies of war materials could be tapped in case of an American embargo. Today it seems likely that the Japanese war machine would be brought to a dead stop if the flow of American oil, iron, copper and machinery were checked.

The new deadliness of the embargo threat is not the only improvement in America's Far Eastern position. Japanese policy, at the time Secretary Hull gave notice of the treaty abrogation, derived much of its force from the implied threat that its blows were backed by Germany and Italy. When the conclusion of the Russo-German non-aggression treaty shattered the anti-Comintern pact, Japaan found itself standing alone. It is as one nation, not a member of a dynamic world-wide alliance, that Japan now deals with the United States.

Japan first attempted to escape its diplomatic isolation by negotiating a truce in its border warfare with Russia. Reports that Soviet troops had previously administered a decisive defeat to the Kwantung army diluted the effect of this announcement, giving the armistice the appearance of a military as well as diplomatic necessity.

Decisive Negotiations

Only two days ago the Tokyo foreign office described the situation as more favorable "than ever before" for a peaceful settlement of differences between Japan and Russia. No confirmation of this new era of crodiality has come from Moscow, although it does appear that Russia has not yet taken advantage of its pact with Germany to apply pressure against Japan.

The attitude of the United States is more important to Japan than that of any single European power, including Russia. During the present "probation period," therefore, Japanese suggestions of an improvement in relations with any of the European powers may be interpreted chiefly as an effort to better Tokyo's bargaining position for the truly decisive negotiations ahead—those with this country.

The overture to these negotiations, the first significant statement on Japanese-American relations since July 26, came four weeks ago in Ambassador Joseph Grew's bluntly worded address to the America-Japan Society in Tokyo. Grew told his startled audience that American opinion deeply resented the Japanese army's "bombings, indignities and manifold interference with American rights" in China.

"When such opinion tends toward unanimity," the diplomat said, "it is a force which a government cannot possibly overlook and will not fail to reflect on its policies and actions." He added that his words came "straight from the horse's mouth."

The first official Japanese reaction came in a statement by Foreign Minister Admiral Nomura, that "the determination of the Japanese nation to bring about a new order in East Asia is too strong to be changed or affected by the interference of a third power."

A stream of confusing and conflicting reports has followed these declarations. The past three weeks have seen a comparatively moderate statement from Suma, asserting that all Japanese-American disputes are within the scope of negotiation, a charge by the same spokesman that reports of impending negotiations stem from "purse imagination" and a denial by the State Department that Grew has threatened Japan with economic sanctions. Perhaps the only safe deduction is that of one seasoned member of the Washington diplomatic corps: "The situation will get more confusing before it gets clearer."

Behind the tough talk now heard in Tokyo—from horse's mouths both Japanese and American—a few clear overtones can be discerned.

Japan needs peace in China. Whether the island empire can climb out of the hole it has dug for itself on the Asiatic mainland depends on the outcome of the old struggle, sharper than ever today, between the military clique and the loose alliance of "moderate elements."

The war's course since mid-summer has not added to the army's prestige. Shortly after the reverse on the Manchurian border, the Japanese high command launched an attack on Changsha on the central front. Chiag Kai-shek's troops withdrew in good order and then delivered a series of powerful counter-attacks, regaining all lost ground and inflicting heavy casualties on the Japanese forces.

The Pressure For Peace

Last week Japanese troops effected a landing on the Gulf of Tonking, at a point only 35 miles east of French Indo China. By Friday night the army claimed an advance of 30 miles into the interior. The new offensive is apparently aimed at communications between "free China" and Indo-China and British Burma. The Japanese forces have not yet encountered a sizable body of Chinese troops, but a major battle appears inevitable if the Japanese come within striking distance of China's vital links with the south.

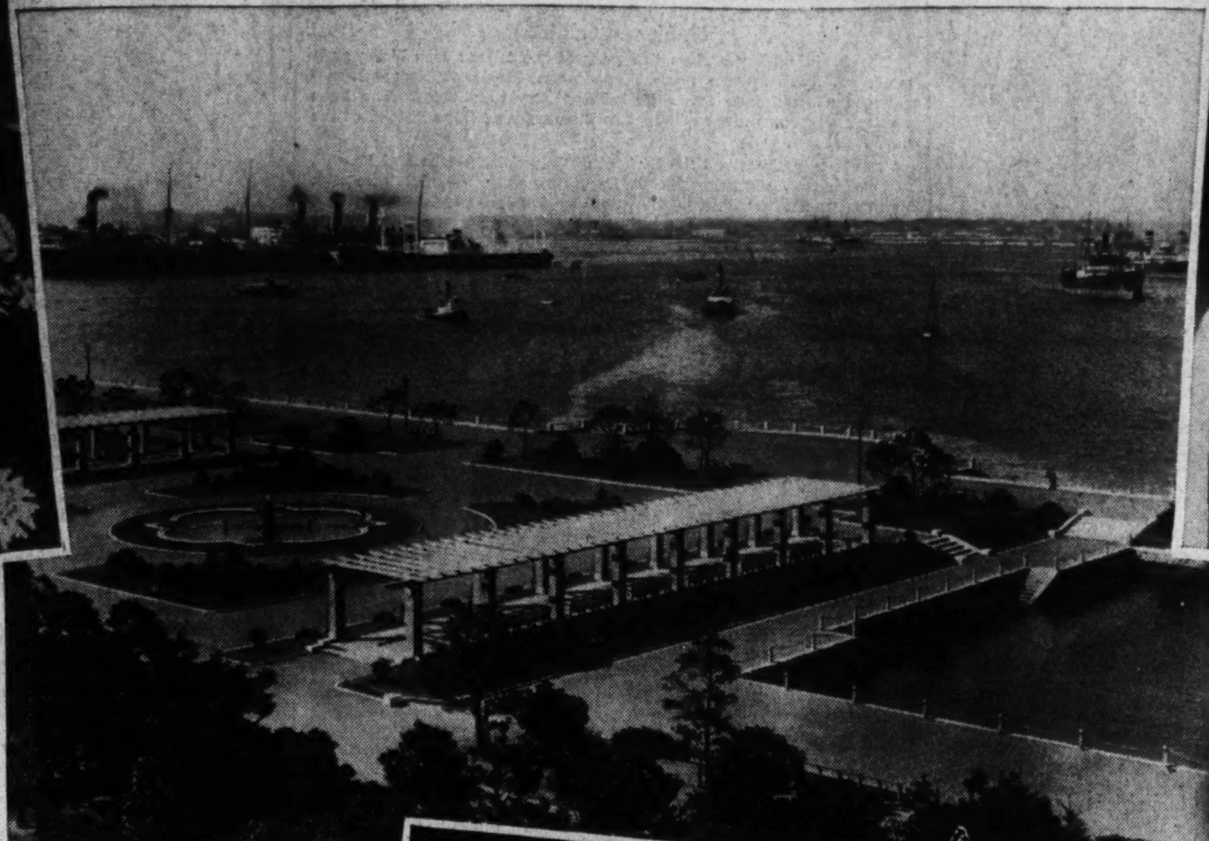
The operations on the Gulf of Tonking have not yet redeemed the army's drab record of recent months. The military clique can no longer trade on its impressive victories of 1937-38 in its fight to stay in the saddle within Japan. Weariness and discontent are spreading on the home front. The economic consequences of the war are making themselves felt in every stratum of Japanese life. The economic collapse so glibly predicted by American wishful thinkers does not appear to be in sight, but there is no doubt that the privations now imposed on the Japanese people lead to a powerful pressure for peace.

In financial and industrial circles, where the war once received influential support, there is a growing feeling that Japan must extricate itself from a costly adventure. The foreign office, whose leaders assess Japan's strength as a world power in far more realistic terms than the army's ill informed "Young Turks," is making its views known in councils close to the Emperor.

The Japanese navy, also more worldly than the fire-eating military clique, is counted as a powerful force in favor of an end to the "China Incident."

All these groups have been disillusioned by the Far Eastern repercussions of the European war. In Japan, as elsewhere, it had been assumed that the new struggle would fall into the pattern of the war of 1914-18. The World War enormously expanded Japanese industry and commerce and enabled Japan to strengthen its foothold on the Asiatic mainland while the Western powers were fully engaged in a distant theater.

The United States, Insisting on Its Rights In China, Reviews Relations With Japan



Ever since Secretary of State Hull served notice on Japan last July that our trade agreement with that country would be abrogated the two nations have been talking turkey about their relations. These talks have been led by U. S. Ambassador to Japan Joseph Grew (above) and Japanese Foreign Minister Nomura (left).

Since the outbreak of the war in Europe, which means imports from that direction are to be increasingly shut off from Japan, the continued presence of U. S. ships in Japanese harbors, principal of which, Yokohama Harbor, is shown above, grows in importance. Japan's need of American imports at the same time adds force to United States demands that its interests in China be protected. Such interests would be located in the Shanghai international settlement (right), and other pieces of American property on Chinese soil. The American flag soars over one of these properties in the picture below.

The war of 1939 has opened no vistas of commercial expansion to Japan, with an economy already impaired by the strain of 28 months of war. In the political field, Russia, instead of being locked in a death struggle with Germany, is a free agent in the Far East, and the United States, because of the new force the embargo threat carries, is in a stronger position vis-a-vis Japan than before the war began.

No Agreement On Peace Terms

Here is the basis for a widespread demand throughout Japan that the empire cease draining its resources and manpower into the 3,000-mile battlefront now thrown across the face of China. But the popular desire to end the war, even the undoubted existence of a powerful "peace party," does not indicate agreement on any set of terms that would be acceptable to the government of Chiang Kai-shek. It may be only a minority in Japan that favors pushing further into China, but it would be an even smaller minority that would agree to disgorge all Japan's conquests and withdraw to the boundaries of July, 1937.

This problem lies at the heart of Japanese-American relations. The American Government has by no means underwritten the war aims of Chiang Kai-shek, but this country is pledged by the Nine-Power Treaty to respect the territorial integrity of China. In an era when the United States has repeatedly challenged the violation of international obligations by other nations, the recognition of Japanese sovereignty over any part of China would be a fatal blow to the "moral basis" for American diplomacy.

A vast gap spreads today between the terms on which Japan will cease firing in China—even assuming the moderates gain control in Tokyo—and the peace terms to which the United States would be ready to grant formal recognition.

Advantages Of Armistice

At the same time there are at least three substantial advantages for this country in a Far Eastern armistice. A peace settlement in China would have a stabilizing effect on a variety of complex international relationships, involving European nations as well as America, now converging on the Far East. To this extent it would tend to quarantine the European war and improve America's chances of remaining neutral.

Peace in the Far East, before Japan and China have fought to exhaustion, is essential to the preservation of any sort of balance of power in eastern Asia. If the Oriental powers carry on their struggle to the bitter end, the result may be the entrenchment of Russia as the dominant power in the Far East.

The economic interests of this country would be served by an early cessation of hostilities. The United States may or may not be ready, out of moral indignation, to lay economic sanctions on Japan, but there can be no doubt that important American economic interests would be served if the Far Eastern war is ended before this country is obliged to face the embargo issue. American trade with Japan normally amounts to four times the value of our transactions with China. Whoever wins the war, the heyday of western trading privileges in China appears to have passed. American commerce with Japan represents a far more substantial economic stake in the Far East, and that stake would not be easily regained when the hypothetical embargo had been lifted.

These factors have led to suggestions that a compromise peace in China could be the basis for a partial settlement of outstanding differences between the United States and Japan.

The United States, according to this theory, would not accord official recognition to any Japanese acquisitions of territory involved in the settlement. Japanese-American diplomacy would continue at the same level as from 1932 to 1937 when this country, while not recognizing the puppet state of Manchukuo, was able to conduct more or less normal relations with Japan. A less formal agreement might be negotiated to take the place of the commercial treaty of 1911. There would be no suggestion of permanence about the settlement, of course, and the whole arrangement would amount to no more than what the diplomats like to call a modus vivendi, or a way of getting along together.

This might prove to be the American adjustment to a compromise peace in the Far East, if voluntarily negotiated by the legitimate Chinese government rather than any Japanese puppet regime. There have been no indications from Washington, however, that the State Department is prepared to apply pressure on the Chinese government to accept such a peace. Answers to most of the problems this country must face on January 26, when the treaty of 1911 dies, must still come from the battlefields and council tables of the Far East.

Diary of a War Correspondent

W. W. Chaplin, International News Service war correspondent, author of "Blood and Ink," and co-author of "When War Comes," continues here the story of his daily experiences as a writer at the front.

October 25.

With the British expeditionary force on the Western Front, the cream of Britain's peacetime military establishment will form the spearhead of the awaited action on the Western Front.

Today I visited the famous Guards Regiment, whose officers are all from the aristocracy. All members of this colorful unit are enlisted for seven years and must be 6 feet or over to be accepted. They are just now in the closest frontier position, with the infantry, antitank and machine gun corps, waiting to set an example for the rest of the army regulars, militiamen and volunteers.

I inspected the vast British trench system which I learned they had dug at tremendous speed in the spongy earth partly for actual war purposes and partly for tactical reasons to confuse enemy espionage and aerial photography. Some were merely dummy trenches never intended for use but to leave the enemy unaware as to which system would be occupied in case of attack.

In the last week I have been all over the British front in France. I have inspected the infantry, artillery, Royal Air Force, tanks and supply service, and I have found everything in utmost readiness for any eventuality. The morale of the troops is the highest, their manner is different from that of the youths who were billeted here in the world war, but more impressive.

At that time the soldiers sang "Tipperary," joked and went to their deaths in gaiety. That was because they didn't know of modern war. They thought it could be won with mere courage. They did win, but not without terrific sacrifices.

The spirit of the soldiers is different now. They are solemn, serious and intent, and every man is an expert in some mechanized science. I have not heard a single song since I arrived in France, but I have seen tens of thousands of men grimly determined to win, with their minds set entirely on carrying through the job in the quickest possible time with the least loss of life. If I were a German officer on the general staff I would fear these serious boys of today, who are all experts in modern scientific warfare, far more than those singing suicides of a quarter of a century ago.

The hardest task of the British troops now is waiting. The war has slipped back into a new war of nerves and Germany is using the element of uncertainty as a weapon to weaken morale. But I have been studying these troops all week long and I am confident they will be ready when called.

With the British expeditionary force on the Western Front—The winter rains have begun in earnest. The gluey mud is getting deeper and the streams are rising. But the British, unlike the Germans, have not been caught unawares.

French newspapers tell of soldiers in the Siegfried Line pumping water out of their underground fortifications, which have been flooded by the rising Rhine. And the same thing might have happened on this front were it not for the smart and careful preparatory work carried out by the British.

The earth is particularly spongy and absorbent and the wet and muddy terrain could very easily have turned into a slough of despondency for the British troops, but the nature of the country was taken into full account in planning the British expeditionary force front line. The whole trench system, which runs parallel to the extensive barbed wire entanglements guarding the frontiers, is drained by auxiliary trenches dug for that purpose. The result is that regardless of the extent of the rains, which quite likely may continue until spring, the British trenches, pillboxes and gun emplacements remain moderately dry and fully ready for any possible military action.

Troops and war machines still are pouring in in an endless stream. There is no question, in my opinion, that the B. E. B. is fully able to man a far longer front than it is presently assigned if the French should ask for additional support.

How do they find out these things? How do they live? What is the routine of their lives? Well, then, I, as one of the eight American reporters on the Western Front of this strangest of all wars, will give you the lowdown. But don't expect dramatics. All Americans Will Give Thanks, But They Don't Agree on the Day

Millionaire Barklie Henry Heads World's Largest Charity Agency

He Pays for Privilege of Holding A Job to Help New York's Poor

By John Lear.
Associated Press Staff Writer

New York, Nov. 18.—Barklie Henry is a millionaire employe of the poor.

He spends at least half of his working week doing the chores that go with the presidency of the Community Service Society, the biggest private welfare organization in the world, to which the needy of New York turn in time of trouble. Such a job in business or industry would pay him $25,000 or more a year, for the society's annual budget runs over $2,500,000. But here he doesn't collect a cent. Instead, he pays for the privilege.

"I believe," he says, "that people who are lucky enough to have money should spend a large part of their time earning their keep in nonpay work useful to the society which supports them. And there is plenty of it to be done."

By people who are "lucky enough to have money" he means those who inherited money without needing to work for it. He has every right to talk that way, for he is one of them.

BARKLIE HENRY

Nine out of ten Americans have never heard of him, because he keeps out of the newspapers. Yet he is the son of a Philadelphia banker related to the Drexels, and his wife is Barbara Whitney, daughter of Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, the sculptress who founded the Whitney Museum of American Art and achieved headline fame as the victorious aunt in the multi-million-dollar court fight over Heiress Gloria Vanderbilt.

In Wall street, Henry is widely known and well liked. He looks little like a financier. He appears more like a student of medicine or law. His sober eyes study the world through horn-rimmed glasses, with much the same analytical concentration a scientist bestows on his test tubes. His strong lean frame reveals him as a sportsman. Yet he has no frivolous side that could enjoy itself at night clubs or in the social whirl. He devotes himself to one major occupation: social service.

He Attends Board Meetings, Too

People usually don't associate wealth with welfare case work. Barklie Henry is an exception to the rule. He begins where many rich patrons of social causes leave off: attendance at boards of directors meetings.

In the Community Service Society, he confers regularly with the administrative staff. He discusses problems with field workers, lends a hand at clinics, invites technicians to dinner at his house. He keeps regular "office hours" at convenient places where anyone interested can see him. At home, far into the night, he reads dry technical reports with an enthusiasm most of us reserve for murder mysteries.

His devotion to this not-$1-a-year job (instead of carrying a salary, it carries an automatic obligation to contribute heavily) once endangered his life. It was Christmas time, and he was helping distribute gifts to needy children. Photographers came and asked for pictures. He waited patiently until the flashbulbs finished popping. Two hours later, he was on the operating table. His appendix was being removed in an emergency operation. A few more minutes to please the photographers, and he might have been a goner.

That's the kind of fellow he is. He plunges into a thing and let's the consequences take care of themselves. That's how he got this job.

"What can a fellow do?" he asked Cornelius N. Bliss, veteran social service leader, when the depression looked deep and dark back in 1931.

"You might go down to the unemployment committee headquarters and offer your services," Bliss replied. Next day, Henry was at the headquarters, saying:

"Put me to work."

He was 29 then, and looked younger. So they sat him at a table and told him to answer letters. No great shakes at the typewriter himself, he called in his secretary and dictated the letters to her. Together they spent virtually all day every working day for weeks after that on the relief crisis. Often the work continued into the evening, at the Henry home.

"Work hard" was the admonition the young millionaire had had drummed into him by his father. This kind of work was hardly what the old man had in mind. Papa Henry (W. Barklie Henry was his name) was not a philanthropist. Like most men of his class of his generation, he believed that the best way to serve his community was through business enterprise. He gave his service in the Philadelphia banking firm of Henry & West.

Grew Up in Big Money Tradition

Thus the son grew up in the shadow of a big money tradition. For, in addition to being a financier himself, the father was a cousin of Mrs. Anthony J. Drexel, whose family was famed for its banking affiliation with the Morgans.

Born in the exclusive Philadelphia suburb of Rosemont, Barklie Henry remembers his childhood as being spent in a democratic atmosphere. But it was the democracy of the select society surrounding a banker's son. Later he went to St. George's School at Newport, R. I., where go such social elects as the Vanderbilts. From there he went to Harvard. A week after his graduation he married Miss Whitney at Trinity Church in Roslyn, Long Island.

After college, he was managing editor of the magazine, Youth's Companion," for two years. After that he bought a partnership in a string of small newspapers in Nassau County ("They grew like rabbits, and took too damned much time") and put some money into the publishing firm of Reynal and Hitchcock because of his interest in that firm's effort to give wider circulation to classics by printing cheap editions.

Always Interested In Social Service

Everything he did however, seemed to turn him toward social service. At Harvard, he was president of the Philips Brooks House, venerable collegiate charity, and later a member ofthe board of the Elizabeth Peabody House, a Boston settlement. At Oxford, he majored in labor and economics, the two subjects that were to become the most vital of the decade that followed. Later, the newspapers brought him into closer acquaintance with community problems.

Even business led in that direction. It was through contact with Edward R. Sheldon on the board of the United States Trust Co. that he became a member in 1931 of the board of New York Hospital, where Sheldon was president.

Fate finally turned the scales. Henry's father (from whom he inherited part of an estate valued then at $1,400,000) and father-in-law died within a few months of each other. His father's estate and his wife's affairs had to be put in order. Henry took the task, quitting the band salesman's job he held at United States Trust to do so. When that was over, he was suddenly left with time on his hands—time to read and think.

He read and thought. With a vision deeper than most men, he foresaw that the unemployment loosed by the stock market collapse of 1929 was going to have far wider repercussions than people generally imagined.

So he went to the emergency unemployment relief committee, and took the letter writing job. From letter writer he advanced to vice chairman of the block-by-block drive for relief funds; to the board of managers of the association for the improvement of the condition of the poor, one of New York's two big private family charities; to chairman of the executive committee of the A. I. C. P., then president. All within three years. When the A. I. C. P. merged, in April of 1939, with the city's other big family welfare unit, the charity organization society, he became president of the joint organization.

Largest Private Welfare Association

That made him one of the two chief officers (Walter Gifford, board chairman, is the other) of the largest private welfare association in the world, with a $2,778,187 budget for 1939-40 and facilities to serve 100,000 needy persons a year through dental and medical and psychiatric clinics, advice in family problems, and care for the homeless.

To this giant new agency, Henry contributed the one thing that makes it different from all others of its kind. He applied the working

District to Celebrate On President's Day

So Will 22 States, Alaska and Hawaii, But 23 Others Will Stand by Last-Thursday Tradition, While Three Plan Two Holidays

By Gerald G. Gross.

Thanksgiving Day arrives this year as the climax to a bitter argument. It started three months ago when President Roosevelt announced a decision to move the holiday forward a week. The issue isn't settled yet, so there will be two Thanksgiving Days instead of the traditional one.

Twenty-two States and the District of Columbia, Alaska and Hawaii, will celebrate on the President's Day, November 23—next Thursday. Twenty-three other States will stand by the last-Thursday tradition, marking the observance on the thirtieth. Three States will celebrate both dates.

Thus the Nation has been almost evenly divided in sentiment over one of our most respected red-letter days—a day that is just twice as old as our other great American holiday, Independence Day. The arguments have been heated and long. And, as usual, arguments seek facts to support them. The shift, proclaimed by President Roosevelt has caused us to do a little thinking about the holiday itself.

Until Mr. Roosevelt brought us up with a shock, we thought Thanksgiving had its beginning when the Pilgrim Fathers sat down to a harvest feast on the last Thursday of November in the year 1621 and gave reverent thanks for their survival and the Lord's gifts. Doesn't that just about coincide with what you thought?

Exact Date Not Known

Well, that is only partly correct. It was a harvest feast, all right, but there was no special religious service. And it is fairly certain that it did not come within two weeks of the last Thursday in November. In fact, none can tell just when the "First Thanksgiving" was held. The book "Fast and Thanksgiving Days of New England," by W. DeLoss Love, jr., reckons that it fell somewhere between September 23 and November 11, probably in the month of October.

"That this was a harvest festival cannot be disputed," says this excellent reference work. "But it has generally been termed the first autumnal thanksgiving in New England and some have supposed that it was the inauguration of a continuous series of thanksgiving occasions. Such is not the fact.

"It was not a day set apart for religious worship but a whole week of festivity. No religious service is spoken of, and it is not likely that any was held, other than their customary morning devotions. The Sabbath services which bounded the week were probably permeated with the spirit of gratitude and for aught we know they may have had a Thanksgiving Day besides. This, however, was a week of rejoicing and pleasure. The Pilgrims would surely have been shocked at 'recreations' during a religious season."

The Hunting Was Very Good

The "recreations" of this occasion are referred to in "Mourt's Relation," which describes the harvest feast as follows: "Our harvest being gotten in, our Governur (William Bradford) sent four men on fowling, that so we might after a more speciall manner reioyce together, after we had gathered the fruit of our labours; they foure in one day killed as much fowle, as with a little helpe beside, served the Company almost a weeke, at which time amongst other Recreations, we exercised our Armes, many of the Indians coming amongst vs, and amongst the rest their greatest King Massasoyt, with some ninetie men, whom for three dayes we entertained and feasted, and they went out and killed fiue Deere, which they brought to the plantation and bestowed on our Governour, and upon the Captaine, and others. And although it be not alwayes so plentifull, as it was at this time with us, yet by the goodnesse of God, we are so farre from want, that we often wish you partakers of our plentie."

From the foregoing and from the meager information set forth by Gov. Bradford in his diary it would seem that the "First Thanksgiving" was, indeed, primarily not much different in principle from today's. Beyond blessing the food and observing their regular morning devotions, there is no evidence that the Pilgrims conducted any exeraordinary rites in the course of their week-long feast. Surely we will rid ourselves of the notion that they were consciously shaping the practices of their descendants and inaugurating the harvest thanksgiving of many millions," says the book by W. DeLoss Love, jr. "It was not a thanksgiving at all, judged by their Puritan customs, which they kept in 1621; but as we look back upon it after nearly three centuries, it seems so wonderfully like the day we love that we claim it as the progenitor of our harvest feasts."

Indignation on Many Sides

A good many State Governors, as well as calendar-makers, football schedule drafters and others, voiced their indignation when President Roosevelt announced last August that he was moving autumn's principal holiday forward a week in order to lengthen the Christmas shopping season. Gov. Leverett Saltonstall of Massachusetts was restrained in his criticism, stating that he would "hesitate a long time" before making any change which seemed "more upsetting than advantageous," but the Thanksgiving proclamation which he issued early this month setting November 30 as the observance date administered a verbal spanking to the President.

"Time-honored custom calls upon us to observe Thanksgiving Day," he began, innocently enough. "It is a good custom, whose proclaimed purpose is worthy of all acceptation. Sincerity here is of the essence.

"Not for revelry and sport, and not for the inauguration of Christmas shopping is this day set apart. It may furnish opportunity for wholesome recreation and sport, and it may be followed by stimulated buying; but the purpose of this Proclamation is, without sham or pretense, to call upon our people to give thanks to 'the Power that hath made and preserved us as a nation.'"

Blessings Were Acknowledged

The Governor then goes on to describe the circumstances of that autumnal feast of 1621, saying: "They had no prosperity. Their harvest was not bountiful. Yet out of these meager remnants they made their Thanksgiving, gave solemn thanks to Almighty God, and shared their scanty store with the Indians."

Certain it is that the Pilgrims were living under severe hardships and half their number had been wiped out during the previous year

FCC Gives Television 'Amber Light,' But Santa Claus Is Needed

Committee Liberalize Rules, but Economic Stability Still Lacking

By James D. Secrest.

A Federal Communications Commission committee last week gave television an "amber light," as the FCC press agent expressed it, but it appeared that this struggling industry may need a Santa Claus to help it across the intersection to economic stability.

Licensees, largely on faith, have invested between $12,000,000 and $15,000,000 in the elusive art to date, and they have hardly scratched the surface of public apathy. While New York City has had regular television program service since last May, less than 1,000 receivers have been sold. And it is little wonder, when one considers that a good set costs $600. Variety obviously is limited, as only one station is on the air.

Ten years ago experimenters believed that successful television service on a par with radio broadcasting was just around the corner. Now they are less optimistic and more vague in their predictions. Even a year ago there was a mild rush by applicants to get in on the ground floor of a promising new industry; now some of them are getting cold feet.

The major obstacle, however, is no longer technical problems—though there are many of these—but economic ones. Pioneers in the field are starting to wonder whether or not they are pouring money into a sinkhole, with only remote prospects of recovering it.

It was with this knowledge that Commander T. A. M. Craven, chairman of the FCC television committee, and his associate commissioners, Norman S. Case and Thad H. Brown, tackled the problem early in 1939. Their report recommending a liberalization of FCC rules and limited program sponsorship on experimental visual broadcasting stations is their answer.

Protection of The Public

Reduction of handicaps to television progress in this country was not the only objective of this committee, as its report reveals. Protection of the public from both unsound investments and inferior service was deemed of equal, if not primary, importance.

Craven and his committee refused to adopt standards proposed by the Radio Manufacturers Association, on the ground that the public might suffer in the resultant increase in sales of receivers. Until the Radio Manufacturers Association could assure the FCC that developments in the technique of television transmission would not make receivers obsolete abruptly, the committee said, the FCC could not bestow its blessing of commercialization on the industry.

At the same time the committee felt that the FCC should not freeze television development at its present stage, as was done in Great Britain, just to assure the public that its receivers would not become obsolete before they had paid for themselves.

Television pictures are now reproduced on a standard of 441 lines and while satisfactory are still far below the perfection of motion-pictures, with 750 lines, or published photographs, with 1,000 lines.

There appear logically to be three stages of television development, the committee found, and only the second has been reached. The first was the laboratory stage of technical research, the second is experimental operation of transmission stations, and the third is the operation of television as a service to the public on a sound economic basis.

Operations Still "Experimental"

"The committee has no information which justifies a conclusion that television has entered the last stage of development," the report stated. "It is still in the 'experimental operation' phase."

In the third stage, the committee explained, "the public will be expected to purchase receivers with the expectance of a stable television service of good technical quality without too rapid an obsolescence of the instruments it has purchased.

"Television transmitting stations linked in a network system by appropriate electrical means for program distribution will be constructed in various parts of the country and operated as a service to the public on a national scale."

Until stations are constructed in scattered sections of the country, however, networks cannot be established, and until networks are set up it is doubtful that the high cost of programs can be so apportioned as to make the broadcasts economically profitable.

Program cost alone in New York City was found to be $15,000 for a 12-hour per week service. Yet, the committee pointed out, that the average cost of producing a motion picture is $300,000, and hinted that television would have to step up, rather than cut, its expenditures to compete.

"If television is to become a real public service," the report added, "the licenses must be adequately financed and be assured of an adequate revenue from the service rendered."

A radio station in a small community can be constructed for about $15,000 and program talent can be obtained for a few hundred dollars a week. Not so with television. F. C. C. officials figure that at least $50,000 will be needed for the initial investment and the cost of staging programs will run many times that of radio.

Radio Coropration of America and its subsidiary, National Broadcasting Co., have spent between $8,000,000 and $10,000,000 on television without any financial return, and Columbia Broadcasting System has invested $1,225,000 and hasn't started broadcasting yet.

Who Is Going To Pay for It?

The question of who is going to pay for this highly expensive art is disturbing both the F. C. C. and the radio manufacturers who are taking the lead in promoting it. Obviously, the industry hopes that tlevision ultimately will reach the stage, like radio, where the public foots the bill indirectly by patronizing sponsors of their entertainment.

But advertisers as a rule are not so philanthropic as to be willing to provide entertainment without reasonable assurance of financial returns. So that until a market of television receiver owners is available, they are apt to be reluctant in taking advantage of the liberalized rules of the F. C. C. The public, on the other hand, is not likely to stampede manufacturers with orders for receivers until television stations and networks are established and regular programs of high caliber are available.

T. A. M. CRAVEN

The cost of television receivers will be cut shortly to an average of $300 instead of $600, it is understood, as a lure to prospective buyers. But it is doubtful whether even that price will bring any volume sales until more stations are operating.

If the FCC follows the recommendations of the Craven committee, it will be careful to grant licences only to applicants with adequate finances and experience in public service. Newspapers, broadcasters and motion picture companies, if able to qualify financially, would be considered capable from a public service point of view.

News and sports events may well become more popular subjects for television pickups than elaborately staged dramas or shows, which would be dismantled after a single performance. The former would be cheaper, it is pointed out, and probably more attractive to the receiving public than a "home movie."

Establishment of a national networks, FCC officials believe, will enable television broadcasters, once audiences are built up, to present rather elaborate programs from a key station and then transmit them via relay or feeder units to affiliated stations. Whether even these will become economically profitable remains to be seen.

Alternatives to commercialized television that have been suggested are Government subsidy or set licensing. Members of the FCC and leaders in the radio industry are strongly opposed to both at present for fear that they might constitute the first step toward Government operation of television and then probably radio.

So, if Santa Claus has any extra money when Christmas comes, he would be welcomed with open arms by the television industry and might get his picture flashed along the ether waves.

Thanksgiving Day

COLUMBUS, OHIO—The Governor of Ohio has issued a Proclamation setting aside Saturday, December 14, as Thanksgiving Day for this State.

In New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Maine, and Michigan Thursday, Nov. 28, has been chosen by the Governors of these respective states as Thanksgiving Day.

President Preparing Report On National Defense

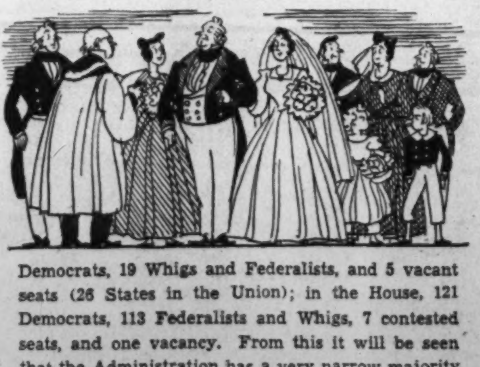
At the last session of the Congress a joint resolution was passed requesting the President to submit a full report on the status of national defence. The investigation will cover the following categories: fortifications, armament, arsenals, magazines, foundaries, batteries, ships of war, navy-yards, and dry-dock yards; in other words a complete survey of all inland and coast defences "with a view to placing the United States in a proper state of national defence."

The President will appoint a mixed board composed of six high-ranking officers—three from the Army and three from the Navy—to assist him in collecting this data.

Members of Congress Start for Washington

The First Session of the Twenty-Six Congress will convene December 2, and already those members residing in States remote from the national capital have started from Washington.

The political line-up in the Senate will be 28 Democrats, 19 Whigs and Federalists, and 5 vacant seats (26 States in the Union); in the House, 121 Democrats, 113 Federalists and Whigs, 7 contested seats, and one vacancy. From this it will be seen that the Administration has a very narrow majority in the Senate and a potential equal balance in the House.



In anticipation of the arrival of members of Congress and their families, together "with numerous strangers," the police of Washington have warned keepers of "Congressional boarding-houses" to be careful as to whom they employ as servants, it being understood that "light-fingered" persons from other cities have come to Washington looking for jobs as household servants for the duration of Congress. Their motive is obvious. "Other undesirables" are also arriving, pick-pockets, petty thieves, etc. The police expect to be kept very busy.

Royal Romance in Full Bloom

LONDON, ENG.—Their Royal Highnesses, Prince Albert and Prince Earnest of the House of Saxe-Cobourg-Gotha, who have been guests at Windsor Castle of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, left on the 15th instant for Dover where they will cross the Channel and proceed to Belgium to visit King Leopold before returning to Germany. It is rumored that the wedding of Queen Victoria and Prince Albert will be shortly announced by Her Majesty. While the Princes were here, Her Majesty commanded Mr. Ross, the noted painter, to paint a miniature portrait of Prince Albert. The portrait is intended for a locket for Her Majesty.

Monument to Mozart

MUNICH, BAVARIA—At the Court Theater this week a special performance of Mozart's Don Giovanni was given to raise funds for a momnument to the great master. Constanze, the widow of Mozart, was a guest in the box of the King and Queen. An exact copy of the original score was brought from Vienna to be used at this performance. Parts previously suppressed were performed.

Austrian Archduke Received by the Czar

VIENNA, AUSTRIA—Archduke Albert has just returned from a visit at the Court of Emperor Nicholas at St. Petersburg, where he was received "in a distinguished manner". The Czar conferred upon him the rank of honorary commander of the regiment of Lithuania, and the order of St. Andrew, the insignia of which was set in diamonds indicating the permission to wear all other Russian orders. Incidentally, Albert brought back some interesting facts regarding the Russian military situation. He leared that the Czar had mobilized 140,000 troops at Borodino, and had 6,000 more held there in reserve. (The village of Borodino is a famous battleground, for here was fought the last great battle of Napoleon and his allies on their march to Moscow.)

Germany Modifies Tariff On American Cotton

FRANKFORT, GERMANY—Henry Wheaton, U. S. Minister Plenipotentiary to the Court at Berlin, and now attending the Congress of the German Customs Union being held in this city, has been able to secure a reduction in German tariff on American cotton. The Prussian government agreed to this reduction because of the large exchange of goods between Prussia and the United States.

The Peoples of Europe Feel Theyy Fight for Ideals, Security

By John Chabot Smith.

For eleven weeks the three greatest nations of Europe have been locked in the most paradoxical of all wars, while the peoples of the world have cried vainly at them, "what is this war about?"

The largest and most heavily armed forces ever assembled in the world's history glare at each from behind the strongest fortifications ever built; but there has been very little fighting.

From one side of No Man's Land spokesmen say "we are fighting a war to end all wars," but they say it in different words, because this war is a rebuke to that slogan as it was used 21 years ago.

From the other side of No Man's Land comes the cry, "we are ready to make peace because this is not our war; it has been forced on us by our enemies."

Both sides declare they are fighting only to establish peace; but neither do they fight, nor is peace established. Both sides have stated their war aims, and these war aims remain irreconcilable; yet the fighting has not begun, and the discussion of peace terms has not ended.

The English and French—and the American people—insistently ask what the Allied governments are fighting for; and they are told, but the answers do not satisfy them.

Objective of The Allies

Last week the King of England and the President of France stated their official war aims in reply to a mediation offer by the sovereigns of Belgium and the Netherlands. From these statements, which consisted of a summary repetition of frequent statements by the Prime Minister of England and the Premier of France, a picture of the Allies' objectives can be seen which is made up in four parts:

1. This is a war to put an end to existing aggression, which to England and France means "stopping "Hitler."
2. This is a war to repair the damage caused by aggression in the recent past, which to England and France means the "restoration" of Poland, Czecho-Slovakia and Austria. (But this is not a war simply for the territorial defense of Poland.)
3. This is a war to prevent aggression in the future. This is the most important part of the Allied war aims, because it raises questions about what is to be done after the war, which affect the point at which Hitler is to be "stopped" and the manner in which Poland, Czecho-Slovakia and Austria are to be "restored." And the consideration of these questions raises the last point:
4. This is a war to defend the principle of democracy, a crusade ditcated by a passion for freedom.

The German aims, as far as they have been officially stated, are simpler. The Nazi slogan for the war is "The Germans are fighting for the rectification of an injustice, the others for its maintenance." Hitler's many speeches provide the meaning for the phrase: the "injustice" is the Versailles Treaty, both for its territorial and economic provisions and for the "humiliation" of the disarmament provisions and the war-guilt clause.

Hitler further claimed, in his "final peace offer" of October 6, that the work of tearing up the Versailles Treaty was now finished, and he was willing to live at peace with other nations if his gains were left untouched. He even expressed a desire for permanent peace in phrases that might have been quoted from Chamberlain or Daladier: "the most important condition for a real revival of economic life in and outside of Europe is the establishment of an unconditionally guaranteed peace and a sense of security on the part of individual nations." He went on to say that if his terms were met he was ready for disarmament.

What the German people think, there is no way of telling; but in all probability they believe these peaceful expressions of Hitler's, and feel that the strength and the pride he has brought to their country is an indispensable pre-requisite to a permanent settlement of Europe's troubles.

But Hitler's desire to keep the lands he has won caused the rejection of his "final peace offer" just as it insured the failure of the attempt at mediation made by King Leopold and Queen Wilhelmina. It was irreconcilable with the first two point in the Anglo-Franch program.

In his October 6 speech Hitler had demanded "the final sanctioning of the European status (quo)" and declared that the future destiny of Poland was to be decided exclusively by Germany and Russia.

Peace on these terms was refused by British Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain on October 12 because Hitler had offered no reparation for his "grievous crime against humanity," and had demanded a peace "based on recognition of his conquests and his right to do what he pleased with the conquered." French Premier Edouard Daladier refused this "German peace" on October 10 because it "would only consecrate conquests by deceit or violence and would not prevent preparation for new ones." And both rejected Hitler's promise to refrain from aggression in the future with the remark that he had broken his promise too often to be trusted.

The French People Demand "Security"

These two points represent the most obvious conflict between the two sides at war, and the most immediate cause of the war. They represent the fear of England and France as nations that Germany as a nation will destroy them. That fear is stronger in France, as France is closer to Germany and has suffered more directly from her in the past. The last war was fought on French soil, and Frenchmen have been interrupting their normal lives at frequent intervals in the last two years to man the Maginot Line.

These two points accordingly bulk larger in French thinking than in English, and are summed up in the term "security." Daladier on October 10 declared, "we are fighting . . . to obtain a definite guarantee of security. Security of nations can rest only on reciprocal guarantees excluding any surprise and erecting a barrier against any attempt at domination." Defense of the fatherland, he said, was uppermost in the French soldier's mind.

A large section of French opinion goes still further, demanding the left bank of the Rhine for France as an "indispensable guarantee for the maintenance of peace." This phrase was quoted by Jean Fabry, former war minister, in Le Matin of October 16 from a memorandum by Marshal Ferdinand Roch of January 10, 1919.

Andre Chaumeix, of the French Academy, advocated in Paris-Soir the destruction of German unity as the only guarantee of a durable peace, adding, "left to herself, Germany will always produce a Hitler."

Such an attitude is not without its counterpart in England. Winston Churchill, in reviving the term "Hun" last Sunday, was appealing to a tendency among Englishmen to regard Germans as brutes by nature who can understand nothing but force and are as a race incapable of understanding democracy.

Such an attitude is in direct conflict with Chamberlain's declaration on October 12 that "we desire nothing from the German people which would offend their self-respect . . . we are not aiming only at victory, but rather looking beyond it to . . . a better international system." But many Englishmen hold Churchill's view of the Germans and many more have not forgotten that they held it during the last war.

The aim of stopping Hitler's march through Europe and regaining from him some of his conquests is typical of the tradition of war aims. These are the normal issues of power politics, issues of the sort that can be settled by the outcome of a military struggle. But if they were the only issues of the war, and if both sides were not restrained by a humanitarian reluctance to unleash the tremendous forces of destruction at their disposal, actual fighting might have begun on the Western Front 11 weeks ago.

Can Aggression Be Finally Ended?

The third point, the ending of aggression for all time, raises larger issues which are not automatically settled in the defeat of one power by another. Aggression is a common feature of European history; if it is to be prevented in the future, a radical change in the organization of European society will be necessary.

The change will be not only in the structure of political relations between nations, but in their economic relations and in the political, economic and cultural relations between the different racial groups scattered among the nations. And such great changes will have to be based upon a change in the philosophies of individuals and nations.

These issues raised by the third point in the Anglo-French program are the issues that have been most talked about since the war began, and for many years before the war. They have been raised by every political dispute between nations in the Versailles era, and by every attempt to face the economic and social problems of the reconstruction period of the 1920's and the depression of the 1930's. They are the unsolved questions that prepared the ground for this war; and the existence of the war, far from solving them, makes their solution more difficult.

Yet England and France claim they have gone to war to find a settlement of this problem and the issues it raises. They have done so because, however dimly they see the principles on which the solution is to be based, they consider Hitler and his principles of Naziism irreconcilably opposed to them.

The overthrow of Hitler thus becomese the first necessary step before any plans under the third point can be put into operation; and the first point, "stop Hitler," ceases to be a mere question of power politics and becomes the first step in the pursuit of an ideal.

The second point, the restoration of Poland, Czecho-Slovakia, and Austria, is also affected by this ideal. British spokesmen have repeatedly denied that England is fighting for a restoration of Germany's 1919 frontiers. Although they have said much in defense of the Versailles Treaty, they have not claimed that it was wholly good, only that it was not without merit and the best that could be done at the time.

The demand for restoration of Germany's three victims is a demand for a better application of the principle of self-determination, after German arms have been removed from the scene, rather than an outright demand that all Germany's new-won territory should be taken from her. The object of their restoration is not simply to make Germany weak once more, but to solve territorial problems in the spirit of justice that will make peace possible.

A Europe Built On Good Faith

This thought was expressed by Alfred Duff Cooper, former British First Lord of the Admiralty, in an article in the New York Herald-Tribune October 30.

"We cannot yet begin to think of map drawing or of frontiers," he wrote, "but we can state broadly that it is our aim to construct a Europe in which good faith will be observed by all and from which violence and aggression shall be banished. In that new Europe all nations shall live at peace and all nations, victorious and vanquished, shall share equally in prosperity."

The broader aim of putting an end to aggression is not simply directed toward preserving or reestablishing the balance of power. A simple return to the uneasy balance of the last few years would not satisfy the English and French aspirations toward "progress," not only because that balance proved temporary but because it brought with it economic and social difficulties which have retarded the advance of democracy.

England has seen her ideal of prosperity and self-government rudely battered in the "post-war" years. To the strains of rapid technological advance and the dislocation of a four-year war were added the attacks of unrestrained economic nationalism. The steady retreat from democracy in Central Europe not only discouraged her crusading liberals but was reflected in social unrest at home. The claims of the economic victims for a larger share in the benefits of modern civilization were brought forcibly to public attention. The structure and spirit of English democracy was threatened by the poverty of large numbers of her people.

England seeks a new prosperity as well as a new peace as a result of this war. But as she sees in the nationalistic atmosphere of the past 20 years a major cause of her troubles, she seeks that new prosperity through a new atmosphere of international rather than national loyalties. England wishes to extend the democratic principle of co-operation from the national to the international sphere, and sees a democratic Germany as the firsts requisite.

Democracy vs. Totalitarianism

The liberals and radicals in England believe they are fighting in Hitler the same things they object at home. To them the war is a crusade for individual liberty, which will result in a more perfect democracy in the world as a whole and in England as well.

This is the fourth point, and this is what gives the war its epochmaking characted. As a struggle between democracy and totalitarianism, the war becomes a stage in the adaptation of England's bill of rights to modern international society. So H. G. Wells recently proposed that a new bill of rights be drawn up and promulgated as England's war aim, an international Magna Charta to be accepted by Germany as a condition of peace.

The study of how democratic principles are to be extended to international life has led to a reexamination of those principles themselves, and of the religion and philosophy on which they are based.

In combatting the Nazi claim that the state is an end in itself, English thinkers have been led to the ancient Greek conception of the state as organized for the moral good of its citizens. The British Ambassador to the United States, Lord Lothian, was saying nothing new at Swarthmore on Armistice Day when he declared that "the root disease of modern society is its dethronement of religion as the governing motive in society."

A more thoroughgoing exposition of the idea is contained in Lionel Curtis's recent book, "World Order." Curtis sets as the aim of modern society the realization of the Kingdom of God on earth, which he takes to be the significance of Christ's message. The Kingdom of God will come as a wrold commonwealth, he says, in which every man will be guided by his sense of duty toward his neighbour, and the state will foster the development in every man of that sense of duty.

These ideas supply the philosophic background for a view which is rapidly gaining currency in England, but which is exactly the opposite of her expressed policy of a few years ago and of the actual behaviour of nations in the past.

Talk of World Federation

That is the view that nations must, after this war, accept limitations on their sovereignty. Talk of federalism has become common in England, and it is a federalism that goes beyond the principle of the League of Nations by accepting an international authority.

In the official platform of the British Labor Party, laid down in the House of Commons by Maj. Clement Atlee on November 8, appears the statement, "An international authority supireor to member states and endowed with power should be constituted."

Such clear and uncompromising terms have never been used by Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain or Foreign Minister Lord Halifax; but Atlee's statement was very generally applauded in the British press. Even the conservative Times, the "organ of the ruling classes," said "it matches well, though it was the speech of the leader of the opposition, with the declaration of the foreign secretary." And discussions on these lines are continuing up and down the country, with the blessing of the government although without the official participation of government leaders.

The details of the proposed "international authority" and its operation remain to be filled in. But if Atlee's statement represents the genuine conviction of the mapority of the English people, that should not be an insuperable problem.

The unwillingness of nations to give the League of Nations the character of an authority, or even to use its machinery to the full by compromising their separate claims in the interest of international cooperation, has been called the main obstacle to its success. And the league, although it signally failed to prevent another major war, has not thereby destroyed itself. It still provides machinery for international co-operation in matters of a social and economic nature, which remains active even though the machinery of political co-operation may suffer during the war.

In the International Labor Organization and the various committees on such matters as international finance, control of the drug traffic, and transport and communications, members and nonmembers alike are participating with notable success and little friction. Far from giving up this work in the face of the handicaps of war, the League plans to discuss at the coming meeting in December a step designed to make it more efficient.

That is the proposal to group the various nonpolitical committees under an autonomous organization similar to the International Labor Organization, which will make an annual report to the League Assembly, but will otherwise pursue its work independent of the League. By thus divorcing the work of positive cooperation from the touchy problems that lead to wars the new organization is expected to work more efficiently and to secure the closer cooperation of nonmember states. A draft constitution for such an organization has been prepared by a committee headed by Stanley

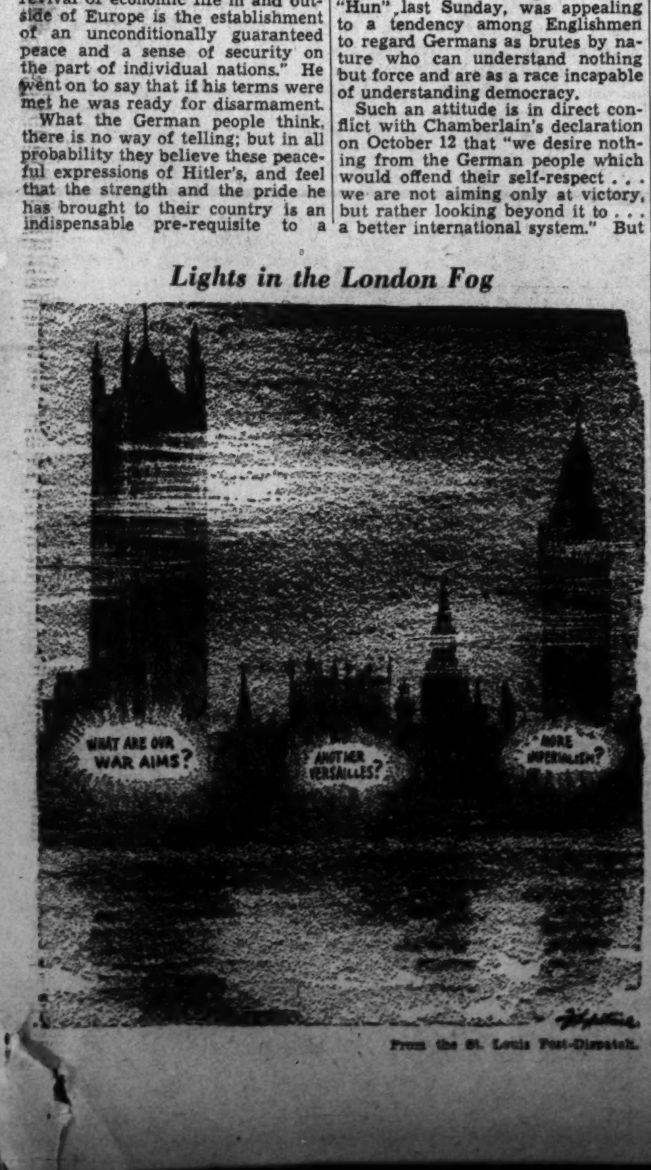
Lights in the London Fog



WHAT ARE OUR WAR AIMS?
ANOTHER VERSAILLES?
MORE IMPERIALISM?

From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Mark Sullivan

There has been a political armistice in Washington that is a fair name for what has gone on ever since the war in Europe began. But the political armistice ended, by an odd coincidence, almost exactly on Armistice Day, Saturday of last week. During the last week, political war has been on again.

The truce was of two kinds. It was between the Republicans and Democrats and it was between the two wings of the Democratic Party.

The truce between the Republicans and Democrats had to come to an end, of course. This is a two-party country, and it is a country that holds Presidential elections every four years. That the election will be held next year as usual, that the contest will be between the two great parties as usual, that it will be a hard-fought election as usual—all that goes without saying.

But there was hope that the other truce might be kept up, that the two wings of the Democratic Party might keep peace with each other, that they might present a united front against the Republicans next year. That hope existed. But through several events of the last week, we now know that hope was vain. The question of principle that separates the two Democratic factions is too deep to permit compromise or silence.

The August Revolt in the Democratic Party

To understand the present Democratic situation, begin with an incident that occurred in the Senate on August 5, last. The incident would have been recognized as sensational had not the hurrying events of that day obscured it.

It was the closing hour of the regular session of Congress. In that regular session Congress had asserted independence of President Roosevelt. The House, with a defiance that almost amounted to scorn, had refused even to consider the President's spend-lend measure—had actually voted not to let the measure emerge on the floor. The Senate had made a similar record of independence of the President.

Not only was Congress, as a whole, out of Mr. Roosevelt's control. (If it is ever proper to speak of any Congress as being "in control" of the Executive.) The members of Mr. Roosevelt's own party were out of hand. It was Democrats, the conservative Democrats, who had defeated Mr. Roosevelt's measures. They had had help from the Republicans, of course, but the Republicans were a minority. The Republicans alone could not have come anywhere near defeating the President's measures. In the House, the Republicans were (and are) only 169 to the Democrats' 261. In the Senate the Republicans were only 23 to the Democrats' 69.

Mr. Roosevelt's New Deal measures had been defeated by the conservative Democrats. Because of that the New Dealers were bitter. In the closing hour of the session, August 5, a New Deal Senator arose to express the anger the New Dealers felt. This spokesman of bitterness was, so to speak, the most 100-per-cent New Dealer in the Senate, Mr. Pepper, of Florida. Senator Pepper excoriated the President's opponents. His excoriation included the Republicans, but in the nature of the situation was mainly directed at the conservative Democrats.

Senator Pepper, embarked upon denunciation, borrowed the technique of French excoriation. He put his angry arraignment in the form of paragraphs, each beginning, "I accuse!"—a dozen times he repeated those words. He accused the conservative Democracts of acting upon "personal grudge." He said that "they hate Roosevelt and what Roosevelt stands for." He called them "Machiavellis," "scheming," "conniving," "Pharasaical," "hypercritical."

Cleavage Between Conservatives, New Dealers

The objects of vituperation, although taken by surprise, talked back, bitterly. Senator Burke, of Nebraska, asked that Mr. Pepper be called to order. When another 100-per-cent New Dealer, Senator Minton, of Indiana, came to Mr. Pepper's rescue, Senator Burke asked, scornfully, whether it was permissible for him to retire to the cloakroom until Mr. Pepper got through talking.

Conservative Senator George, of Georgia, demanded that Senator Pepper give the names of the Senators whom he was excoriating. Senator Pepper, presumably knowing that to name names would be unparliamentary, did not mention any Senators specifically, but went on with his denunciation of Senators whom everybody knew he meant. Conservative Democratic Senator Bailey, of North Carolina, arose to ask: "Would it be in order for a Senator to characterize the remarks of another Senator . . . as cowardly and mendacious?"

That was August 5, last. Throughout August the angry cleavage continued. President Roosevelt, taking the side of his New Dealers, entered the battle in person. Repeatedly and publicly he disparaged the conservative Democratic Senators, made accusation against them.

Then came the war, and the special session of Congress. Mr. Roosevelt wanted his new neutrality measure. He could not get it through the New Deal Senators—they were too few in number and, besides, they had angered the conservative Democrats. Had Mr. Roosevelt entrusted his neutrality measure to the leadership of such New Deal Senators as Pepper and Minton, it is hard to estimate what might have happened.

Garner Did Fine Job on Neutrality

Mr. Roosevelt was obliged to rely on the regular Democrats. They did a fine job for him. Vice President Garner, head and symbol of the conservative Democrats, took hold in Mr. Roosevelt's behalf. The conservative Democrats carried the neutrality measure through the Senate by an extraordinary majority, sixty-six, to twenty-three—with only twelve out of the sixty-nine Democrats opposing. Democratic Senators whom Mr. Roosevelt had attempted to "purge," going into their States in person to ask Democratic voters to vote against them—Senators George, of Georgia; Smith, of South Carolina; Tydings, of Maryland—all supported Mr. Roosevelt now. Other Democratic Senators whom Mr. Roosevelt's radical associates had atempted to purge, such as Senator Gillette, of Iowa, supported the President on the neutrality measure. Democratic Senators against whom Mr. Roosevelt had discriminated, such as Senators Glass and Byrd, of Virginia, now supported the President.

In return, Mr. Roosevelt practiced forbearance. He made no attacks on the conservative Democrats, such as he had made a score of times in the past. He made no attacks upon conservatism generally. He kept his radical New Dealer associates in the background.

Immediately upon the close of the special session, the question arose, would the truce continue into the regular session of Congress in January and through the coming political year? For that, there was one price Mr. Roosevelt would have to pay. He would have to make it known that he was not a candidate for a third nomination.

Southeast Churches Join Forces Against Juvenile Delinquency

Survey of 56,000 Homes Expected to Stimulate Use of Community Agencies

By Robert Tate Allan

A representative of the Committee on Religious Education greets a mother and son and gathers information for the Southeast's survey of community activities

Local ecclesiastical history will be made this Tuesday night at Trinity Methodist Church, as nine churches of six denominations link arms in a drive against juvenile delinquency and other community evils.

Three hundred workers, the "cream of the crop" of the Methodist, Lutheran, Episcopal, Presbyterian, Christian and Brethren congregations in Southeast Washington, will meet to fire the opening gun in the project—a survey of 56,000 homes in the community.

Armed with pencils and pads, they will venture forth several days later to rap thousands of doors, in an effort to determine what use Mr. and Mrs. Jones and their family are making of the available character-building agencies in the community.

"Is Johnny using the Southeast Boys' Club? Or the Neighborhood House? Does he know our church has a Boy Scout troop? Do you have any church connections?"

These will be among the questions asked as the workers visit their allotted areas.

Designated as the Southeast Inter-Church organization, the movement was born several weeks ago at an interdenominational church dinner at Metropolitan Presbyterian Church. There it was revealed that the Southeast area, with 8.7 per cent of the District's population, has 15 per cent of its juvenile crime. More than 11,000 children between 3 and 18 live there, and only 90 out of 300 people are using available social and religious resources.

The Keynote Of the Plan

At that function, attended by religious and civic leaders, the Rev. George H. Bennett, now chairman of the executive council of the inter-church project, and pastor of Wilson Memorial Methodist Church, threw his arm in brotherly fashion about the shoulders of the Rev. Edward Gabler, rector of Christ Episcopal Church, Navy Yard, and made a statement sounding the keynote of the whole plan.

"It's about time we forgot our denominational differences and worked together toward the common aim of community betterment," he said. Mr. Gabler added that "it doesn't matter what sort of an ecclesiestical collar we wear, we all worship the same God." Mr. Bennett is also chairman of the Juvenile Delinquency Committee of the Southeast Neighborhood Council.

As one clergyman put it, the men and women left that meeting feeling that "a new day was dawning for local church co-operation." Shortly afterward, the leaders appointed an executive council, consisting of clergymen from each of the nine churches, and one layman from each denomination. They are as follows:

Members of The Council

Metropolitan Presbyterian Church, Dr. J. Lowrey Fendrich and J. B. Hanby; Reformation Lutheran, the Rev. Ralph W. Loew, assistant pastor, and James Taylor; Washington City Church of the Brethren, Dr. Warren D. Bowman and Arthur Purcell; Fifteenth Street Christian, the Rev. Leslie L. Bowers and Eric Daenecke; Christ Episcopal, Navy Yard, the Rev. Edward Gabler and Bernard G. Ladd; Wilson Memorial Methodist, the Rev. George H. Bennett; First Methodist, the Rev. A. F. T. Raum; Trinity Methodist, the Rev. E. B. Wilcox, and North Carolina Avenue Methodist, the Rev. Bernard I. Barnes. H. G. Watts, layman of the First Church, is representing the four churches of his denomination. Dr. Oscar F. Blackwelder is Reformation pastor.

These men will direct the efforts of the workers, who will cover the area within the boundaries of South Capitol and East Capitol streets and the Anacostia River. All of the co-operating congregations have agreed to designate November 26 as a "Consecration Sunday" for the drive, to continue several weeks. Meanwhile, appeals for support are being heard from the respective pulpits, and in other church organization gatherings.

Local religious leaders yesterday joined in commenting upon the value of the project, which aims to intensively study the constructive forces in the community, encourage use of social and welfare agencies at public disposal, and attempt to correlate social and religious organizations' work.

The Rev. John L. Mixon, head of the social welfare department of the Washington Federation of Churches, among the movement's most enthusiastic boosters, visioned the idea as effecting better understanding between churches and social agencies as to their respective resources.

Will Extend Social Services

"It will also uncover needs in the Southeast area, undoubtedly pointing the way to an extension of services along that line," said he, explaining that modern people, especially urbanites, are "ignorant of the real needs of the community." He blamed this on the "impersonalizing" of social work, with paid employes, in contrast to earlier days, when volunteers made closer and more human contacts with the needy. He praised neighborhood councils' system of having lay and social workers act together, as a means of getting first-hand information on the needs and resources of communities.

Mr. Mixon pictured the new Southeast project as "one of those things often talked about but seldom tried," and expressed the opinion that, while it is too early to predict its outcome, "something has happened in the Southeast that will be of vital importance to the church life of the entire community."

"The mobilization of all denominations for the first time in one community is something that should have been done years ago," declared Dr. J. Lowrey Fendrich, who on Tuesday will explain the purpose of the survey to the workers. He added that "we are dependent upon each other, and for us to act separately is to defeat the purpose of our common Christain task."

May "Start the Ball Rolling"

Dr. Fendrich's assertion that the Southeast project will "start the ball rolling" in other sections got encouragement yesterday, as a group of ministers began discussing the possibility of a similar movement in their community.

Meanwhile, other comment came from Dr. Oscar F. Blackwelder, the Revs. Ralph W. Loew, Edward Gabler, A. F. T. Raum, Leslie L. Bowers, Warren D. Bowman, Edward B. Wilcox and Bernard I. Barnes, and others. The latter is chairman of the Southeast School of Religious Education to be launched by the interchurch group in January.

They all feel that the project will, among other things, make their churches more concious of their immediate needs. Because their congregations have moved, four out of the nine churches draw their membership from other parts of Washington. Consequently, they have neglected those on their own doorsteps.

They all are determined that the movement shall not stop at the survey, "graveyard" of so many promising enterprises. Toward that end, after the information garnered from the survey is placed in a central file, they will make a concentrated follow-up effort to get people to actually use community resources.

Henry Works Full Time For the Poor

And He Pays for The Privilege of Running Biggest Private Aid Society

principle of a hospital to the whole community and persuaded his fellow board members that the society have three integral functions:

1. Service. Actual care of needy families. Comparable to the hospital's daily care of patients.
2. Training. Education of social workers through schooling and practice. Comparable to hospital training of nurses and doctors.
3. Research. Investigation and appraisal of the value of different kinds of social service, and experimentation with new treatments. Comparable to a hospital laboratory.

This third point provides the first practical, accurate means of checking which welfare technics are successful and which are not. It opens a new road toward making social science more exact science. At least $25,000 a year for five years will be spent in following this road as a result of Henry's insistence.

The staff of the hospital is as enthusiastic about him as is the staff of the community service society. And for the same reasons: his concentration on the job, his willingness to work at it, his ability to talk their language without losing the layman's perspective, his knack of knowing when to ask questions and when to get out of the way and go home, his genius for analyzing difficult technical studies and coming up with brief memoranda that strike straight to the point, and, most of all, his art of making his suggestions to them sound like their suggestions to him.

But He's Not Too Perfect

All this may make Barklie Henry sound like a too-perfect young man, but he has the normal male virtues and/or vices. He smokes, drinks, and cusses well-turned blue phrases. One of his favorite books is Boccaccio's Decameron, which has been suppressed at various times in various places for its spiciness. He drives a hard tennis ball, risks his neck on ski runs, and cheerfully sits through a cold rain for a shot at ducks on the wing.

His talk is clipped short, like his brown hair, which does not yet show any threat of baldness, although he is 37. The hair, the lack of a bulge at his waistline, and the ramrod straightness of his back give him the look of a stripling at meetings of most of the boards he sits on, for his fellows in these weighty sessions are frequently gray-haired. At Cooper Union, for example, his colleagues are Elihu Root, Walter Gifford, J. P. Morgan and Gano Dunn.

This comparative youthfulness is a distinct advantage. It permits him to do things an older man couldn't possibly get away with. Progressive innovations can be pressed safely from his vantage point. If they are accepted, fine and dandy; if they are rejected, they can always be—and are—excused by the older heads, as impetuosities of inexperience.

Appropriately enough, considering his philosophy about the pursuits of the wealthy, the great majority of Henry's responsibilities are in the field of community service. He is a trustee of St. George's school and a member of the visiting committee of the economics department at Harvard. He is a director of the Milbank (social research) memorial fnud, one of the managers of the United Charities organization, a vice president of the greater New York (welfare) fund, a director of the welfare council, a trustee of the United Hospitals fund, a member of the planning committee of the hospital council of Greater New York, and a trustee of the citizens budget commission.

On the more material side of life, as the husbandman of his own and his wife's fortunes, he sits on the boards of the United States Trust Co., American Telephone & Telegraph, and Texas Corporation.

Altogether, his activities keep him hopping. At his office at 31 Nassau street, in the Wall Street neighborhood, there is no such thing as an "average" day. Usually he arrives at 9 a. m., but there are all sorts of exceptions. Two mornings a week he goes to the community service society headquarters, and holds "office hours" from 9 to 10 or 10:30. One morning a week he stops first at the hospital, holding "office hours" there from 8:30 to 9:30 or 10 o'clock. A jangling telephone, board meetings, luncheons, break up the rest of the day. Quitting time normally is 5 o'clock, but more often than not there is something to be taken care of after that; perhaps a dinner meeting.

He Cruises on His Vacations

If Henry kept up his vigorous pace the year round, his physician says he would burn out soon despite his athletic physique. He takes six weeks in summer and six weeks in winter for vacation. Much of this is spent in cruising, with his yachtswoman wife, on their 62-foot yawl, Odyssey, between their two homes here (an apartment at 1120 Fifth avenue in winter and a country place at Old Westbury, Long Island, in summer) and their Bermuda villa, Wreck House, and in more distant waters.

Writing (he has been pecking away at a psychological novel for the last 15 years) skiing and photography are other hobbies. He finds most relaxation, however, in reading books on sociology and psychiatry, which have been his chief interests for years. But lately he has been turning back to the classics. His favorites are in pigskin binding on his yawl: Shakespeare, the Bible, Bacon's essays, A. E. Housman's poetry, Don Quixote, Chaucer's "Canterbury Tales," "The Oxford Book of English Verse," the "Decameron," and Plato's "Philosophy."

Big social doings are absent from his calendar. Neither he nor his wife like night clubs. They go seldom to the opera, often to the theater. Their everyday life is a quiet life, at home. Henry's dress is smart, but subdued. His nickname, "Buzz," suggests a small whirlwind. It is a false clue; Henry operates silently. He is devoted to his wife and to their two children, Barklie, 11, and Gertrude, 14, whom he drives to school himself each morning on the way to work.

—BUT NO TEARS FALL

The Washington Community Chest says its agencies need $2,000,000 to operate adequately during the coming year, and the parent organization is now in the midst of a campaign to raise the amount. To find out just what success in the fund-raising drive means to the individual agencies, a Post reporter visited several of them, then wrote the following story.

By Scott Hart

What will happen if Washington fails to provide the $2,000,000 asked by the Community Chest? The agencies' universal answer is "curtailment."

At the Travellers' Aid headquarters—where the qestion was asked first—three persons sat in hard, straight-backed chairs against the wall by the door where the transients of the world come through. One face was about 60 years old and the eyes studied the rough brogan shoes as if for an answer. How much longer would the soles last?

Any other face, about 20 years old, had eyes that the road and life's ups and downs hadn't deadened. They played on the room with expectation, questioning life, even challenging it. The third face was of a colored woman, massive in body. Her head rested sidewise in her hands, her eyes in a dreaming prayer and reproof of some misfortune kept back of the eyes.

They just sat there, for that was hope, at least. It was warm there and people smiled at them, talked encouragingly to them, and said maybe something would come.

Facilities Limited Even Now

Out of their earshot, the officials declared: "Even now we are limited to those cases that can be handed quickly."

The reason: A budget stripped to the bone. That something should be done for the majority of the cases is patent. But there is no flexibility in rules and the faces of the transients aren't used for illustrations in books of rules.

The rules simply say: That to become eligible for public relief in Washington one must have lived and have been self-supporting in Washington for at least 12 consecutive months . . . There are many more rules considerably unknown to the two men and a dark women with reproving eyes who, with a legion of others, go to the Travelers Aid for something equally realistic but more helpful to themselves.

No tears fall when the Travelers Aid official talk about it. They feel sorry for the people, but they have too much time making ends meet to dry tears.

Wish to Help Isn't Enough

The lady at the Travellers' Aid said that often she hears babies crying for food and she does what she can about it—but such realistic matters require cash. If there is little cash—and that has been the case—then what cash there is has to be divided among many crying babies; among many men who stare at their shoe soles, among many women whose eyes reprove life and attention has to be given the boys whose challenging eyes might be quieted by a ticket home where they would like to be.

And while no tears fall, no one loses herself in romance, either. But romance parades through the office with everything but banners or the long horns of adventure. Statistically, here is how they came in during last year:

By auto, 162; bus, 348; freight train, 93; hitch-hiking, 496; passenger train, 2,769; steamship, 27; not enroute 771., and unknown, 198.

The officials say some of them make the appearance of characters in "The Grapes of Wrath." Most of them, it is said, are honestly looking for work and will work at anything. Few of them understand why such good intention doesn't do them any good.

Take to the Road So Rations Go Farther

Among them are some 'teen aged boys and girls who left home for endless roads because their family means enabled the parents to care only for the youngest. "We thought what food was on hand ought to go to the children," they speak up.

The officials begin citing statistics again: Cases carried over from 1937, 95; cases accepted during 1938 (including 10,143 individuals), 4,771; cases closed during 1938, 4,738; cases carried over to 1939, 128, and advice information, referral, 18,938.

And upon such unemotional business comes the sound of a baby crying out in the waiting room. Then they will say that sometimes a family with seven or eight children come in. And there is little money to go around and what there is must be divided among the most critical cases, they say. Of course, if the appropriation is reduced these "strangers in your town," as the agency refers to them, will still be here, looking with deadened, reproving or challenging eyes.

But no one takes time to let tears fall. It's not an emotional business, they say. But a very practical business.

The Instructive Visiting Nurses' headquarters said the same thing: If the goal is short and appropriations are cut—curtailment.

At the present there are 67 in the field staff. It isn't that the nurses aren't willing to carry the burden of shorter finances. But they have put in such overtime hours as would make John L. Lewis scream. The officials there recognize the limitations of human stamina, know that the staff is too small for the demands made on it and hope for an increase of workers, rather than curtailment.

Their talk in the informal moments runs something like this: Many of the people the nurses attend have not always been poor. Many of them, too, had sufficient finances to care adequately for necessities of life—unless sickness came in their families. For sicknesses, those of any duration, these people were wholly unprepared. And the sicknesses wear down the family finances generally.

Case May Be Serious, But Who Knows?

Then calls come to the I. V. N. A.—hundreds of calls.

"He is suffering with a cold and a fever," it may be said. Possibly, to the nurses, this may mean pneumonia. Or again, "He has suffered a burn." Maybe it is trivial, maybe it isn't. A nurse goes out on the call. Each one of them goes on eight or nine such calls a day.

If the case is serious, the I. V. N. A. gives it all the attention of which its limited staff is capable. But there are many cases, serious ones among them, and prenatal cases by the scores. Seven days a week the nurses in the dark blue uniform go out, often to strange environments. A gypsy woman gave birth to a baby in a vacant store one night. A nurse stood by—but that's within the romantics of it—a highlight.

They have statistics, too, 27,624 patients last year; 164,756 visits—often to sufferers alone in boarding-house rooms or in some dreary environment where the words of the nurse are the only bright words of a day. They see curtailment of activities through their sufferers' eyes, driving themselves in the meanwhile, seeing no romantics but a lot of duty. That's what their officials say of them.

"Curtailment," said the Family Service Association, an organization going back 50 years through the old Associated Charities, its parent. Its stock in trade is the human element and the problems of human adjustment. Where needed, it affords financial service—but its underlying aim is to bring adjustments about. It tries to show people how to use their own capabilities.

Illnesses and unemployment are at the root of much family misadjustments, they say. And the aftermaths bring husbands and wives to the association. A man comes in, saying he has pounded the pavements looking for work. This man almost screams in reiteration to show to the association and to prove to himself that he is still upright, doing all he can.

The workers there know that the more pavement that is pounded, the deeper, somehow, becomes confusion and fog. Very often they can show the man that he is pounding the wrong pavements, that his capabilities are in employments on other streets.

The association workers like to take these cases at the start. They have found that the longer the pressure has been on the individual, the more difficult becomes adjustment. The number of cases is large and a decrease of workers would stop the handling of many cases right in the middle, before the final adjustment can be made.

Miss Margaret Bell Merrill, head resident of the Barney Neighborhood House, had much to say on curtailment. "Last year we faced this problem," she said with no smile. "And our work is so closely knit that anything affecting one department is likely to touch half a dozen others. The one group standing alone is the oldest—the pre-school kindergarten"

This group has an enrollment of 46 and they range from 3 to 5 years, she continued. "This service to the neighborhood cannot be measured in terms of the morning hours when the babies are here singing, playing, drinking their milk and getting their exercise out of doors in the garden.

"It reaches into the families and often brings the mothers to our Mothers' Club and the older brothers and sisters to the clubs organized for their ages. In spite of the fact that we should be heartsick at the prospect of telling these babies and mothers that the kindergarten must be closed, we might have to do it since that is a branch of the work which could be lopped off without touching the other branches," she said.

Other Services Would Be Cut, Too

But abandonment of this service, she said—which has been maintained for over 30 years, "is not the only thing we would have to face if the Chest goal is not reached." A comparison is significant, she said. In boys work, attendance for the first five months of 1937 was 3,776; for a similar period of 1938, 8,969, and for a similar period of 1939, 17,319.

"This is boys' attendance only," she pointed out. And the staff for boys' work has been increased only by one WPA worker, she pointed out. "Incidentally, I am told that there are 200 boys in this immediate vicinity for whom no room, no time and no workers are available.

"Figures mean to us not the cold 11,000 increase in attendance, but the group of small boys who came in the other night to join 'Neighborhood House,' and to whom we were forced to say that our classes and clubs were so full that we could take on no more."

If the goal is not reached, "not only would we have to turn back into the homes the babies who come skipping to the door each morning, but we would have no hope of giving to the rapidly increasing number of boys and girls in the neighborhood any access to the clubs and classes, craft rooms and the carpenter shop and the improvised gymnasium which the boys themselves a year ago developed from an old stable," she said.

No tears fell here. She spoke crisply in the terms of human business matching statistics against need as it was occurring.

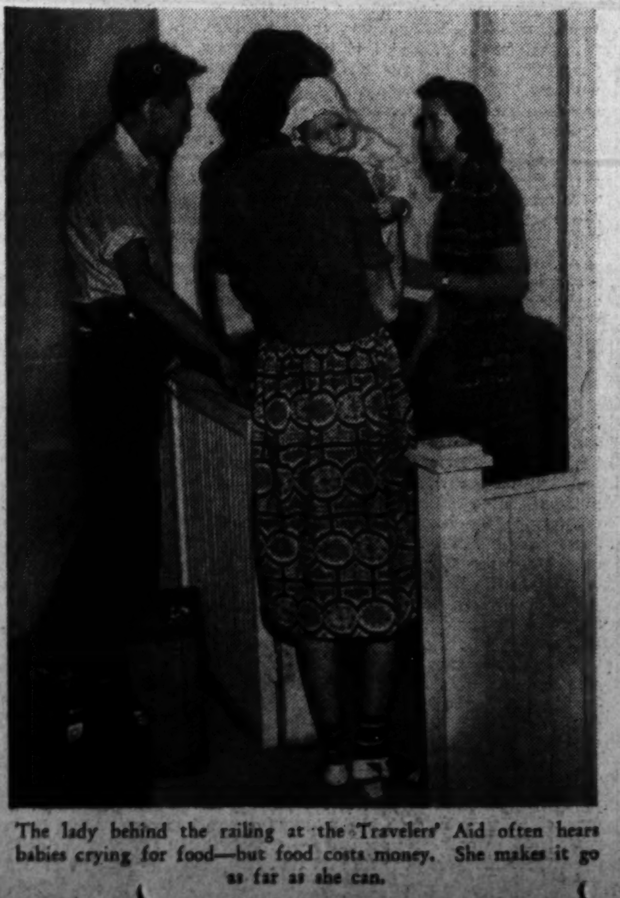
The Salvation Army said that even now it was compelled to reject 50 or 60 families applying monthly at the Family Service Bureau. A cut through failure of the drive would result in more rejections—more faces turned from the door. The summer camp this year could take care of only two-thirds of those it should have because of a lack of funds. There, said the officer, were additional disappointed faces.

"I could," he said, "give case after case and with the statistics, too," and speak of the faces behind the cold figures that add to the $2,000,000 Washington is asked to give.



The lady behind the railing at the Travelers' Aid often hears babies crying for food—but food costs money. She makes it go as far as she can.

A Week-End Review of Current Publications

Krivitsky's Story

By Ernest Southerland Bates

CERTAINLY the writer most discussed in New York, and possibly in America, during the current year, has been the enigmatic Walter Krivitsky, former chief of the Soviet Military Intelligence in western Europe. When his astounding revelations began to appear last last winter in "The Saturday Evening Post," the Communists and fellow travelers assailed them with three arguments, any one of which might have been good, but scarcely all three: in the first place, Krivitsky did not exist; besides that, he was only an underling in the department of which he claimed to have been the head; finally, and worst of all, having been the head of so important a department, he was obviously an untrustworthy scoundrel in betraying its secrets. The thousands who have since seen Krivitsky or heard him speak over the radio will be disinclined to accept the first accusation, and readers of his book will be equally disinclined to accept the others.

It is quite true that any one who turns state's evidence is to some degree a suspect, and that Krivitsky waited overly long before making his break with the Soviet, continuing to serve it for years after he had learned to know, by his own account, the true character of its rulers. His situation did not become personally unbearable until the summer of 1937, when he was asked to betray an intimate friend to the Ogpu and his refusal led to the break.

But his explanation may be provisionally accepted that until the military trials of that year he had continued to hope against hope that the government to which he had devoted 20 years of his life might still redeem itself. At any rate, it is only through men like Krivitsky, who have remained long in the Soviet service, that we are ever likely to learn the full truth about it; for those outside cannot know its inner workings, and those inside, for obvious reasons, will not tell.

"In Stalin's Secret Service" is, in substance, the series of hastily written articles in "The Post" now presented in a far more readable form, with some additions, and with a terrific cumulative force. For sheer excitement as a narrative of plots, counter plots, intrigues and mysteries piled on mysteries there are few detective stories to equal it. The book has the gruesome fascination of a dozen tales of diplomatic intrigue and a dozen crime stories rolled into one. It is the most devastating indictment of Stalinism ever published. The attacks of Andre Gide, William H. Chamberlin, Eugene Lyons, Souvarine and even Trotsky are mild in comparison with the sensational charges brought by Gen. Krivitsky.

WALTER G. KRIVITSKY

IN THE LANGUAGE of journalism, Gen. Krivitsky is to be credited with four important "scoops." The first, which has done more than anything else to enhance his reputation, is his virtual forecast of the Russo-German pact, months before the event, through his revelation of Stalin's secret pro-German policy since 1934 and the all-but-successful achievement of a similar pact in 1938. Less significant today but even more startling is his contention that the Soviet government was behind the epidemic of counterfeiting that appeared in 1929-'30 and that it "put into circulation throughout the world about $10,000,000 of bogus American currency."

Krivitsky is also the first to bring out the alleged fact that most of the gold in the Spanish Loyalist treasury was shipped to Russia in exchange for a hesitant and half-hearted assistance against Franco, in which the Stalinists were, characteristically, more interested in seizing the government for themselves than in saving Spain. Finally, Gen. Krivitsky is the first to give the inside story of the execution of Tukhachevsky and the other generals as a result of a plot, in which, according to his account, Krivitsky himself unwittingly furnished the agents who gathered the evidence for the frame-up.

Certain prophecies of tremendous importance, which Gen. Krivitsky does not venture to make, are nevertheless implied in his book. The first is that, contrary to Western hopes, Stalin's sympathies will continue to be with Germany in the present conflict; the second is that these sympathies will not lead him to abandon formal neutrality, since, as Krivitsky reiterates, "Stalin wants to avoid war at any cost;" the third is that the morale of the Red Army, built up through long years of untiring effort by Trotsky and Tukhachevsky, was so completely shattered in 1937 by the execution of 35,000 officers—Gen. Krivitsky's estimate—that it will be a long time before that army can function effectively in a major war.

Besides these main points of interest in the book there are many others. It contains an excellent chapter on the transformation of the Comintern from an agent of international revolution into an agent of nationalistic propaganda, Moscow carrying, Gen. Krivitsky believes, from 90 to 95 per cent of the expenditures of foreign Communist parties. A chapter of the now well known operations of that undelectable institution.

Gen. Krivitsky's implied suggestion that Stalin himself was responsible for the murder of Kirov, which supplied the pretext for the first mass executions is not new, but the evidence for it is here marshaled effectively. The phenomenon of the confessions is made almost understandable by this author as the result of a combination of the frame-up, the third degree, fear for wives and children, a lingering hope of personal escape and a fanatical, almost mystical, devotion to "the party" as something that must be preserved at whatever cost to individual honor.

THE AUTHOR, perhaps somewhat "westernized" by his years at The Hague and in Paris, seems cool, collected and rational, but the world he reveals is a nightmare of power politics and ruthless personal ambitions, fake trials, assassinations, double-crossings and betrayed betrayals that reach their climax in the fantastic story of Gen. Skobline, who was at one and the same time an agent of the Soviet Ogpu, the German Gestapo and the White Russian Federation of Czarist Army Veterans. The mood of national suspicion prevalent during the last decade in contemporary Europe is well illustrated by Gen. Krivitsky's account of the German "Disinformation Service," engaged in manufacturing fake military plans for the express purpose of having them stolen by foreign governments!

"In Stalin's Secret Service" is internally consistent and, in the reading, altogether convincing. The author is a part of the scenes he describes: much of the vivid interest of the book is due to the interwoven account of his own perilous life spent in looking down into all these volcanic craters from the thinnest of rims. It is virtually incredible that such a work, with its multiplicity of details about nearly all the important characters on the Russian stage, could have been written by any one not of high place in the Soviet system.

It is, of course, true that though a book may be self-confuting it cannot be self-proving; its truth ultimately depends not on its internal consistency or plausibiliyt but on its relation to external fact. But while awaiting that final confirmation which only the future can give, one may believe, on the basis of the internal evidence and the limited external evidence now available, that "In Stalin's Secret Service" will in all probability survive the test.

Mexican Autumn

THINGS are this way; one may not hope to understand, but must accept. This is about the only conclusion Mr. Ficke reaches with regard to Mexico. Yet no one could read his extraordinarily human story without attaining a new feeling for the Mexican people.

Mrs. Morton has lived in her villa on Lake Chapala for years. The story is really that of her life—from 80 onward—but the episodes that pass under her sympathetic eyes encompass all the contradictions of an Indian-Spanish folk: The laziness and ferocity, the art and squalor; the altruism and venality of the revolutionary mind, the disillusioned resignation of the populace shot through with blood thirsty patriotism.

Mrs. Morton is the friend of her god-struck gardener, Chango, as of Don Enrique Devargas Castellano, the great poet. She is as good at buying the tail of a burro, so that it will no longer be twisted by the burro's master, as she is at purchasing a long-buried work of art from a poor man at the end of the lake. Each incident is packed with a quiet and deep-seated sort of suspense. Mr. Ficke has written a novel with distinct flavor.

HERE IS a book for boys and girls who have grown out of the Goldilocks-Black Sambo-Chicken Little stage of juvenile letters but who still like to read about animals. That is, about every child past the age of 8 years. Mr. Bransom's drawings show animals in action—no stuffed specimens. The text present straight-forward facts about the animals rather than stories. Wild animals, such as the beaver, the wild turkey, the bison, and whales, have touched American history at surprisingly many and vital points. This book unobtrusively emphasizes these contacts; it makes a fine, artistic, and instructive gift volume. In all, it contains 20 full-page drawings, with text opposite, in addition to the end-papers of passenger pigeons in flight.

Course Of Empire

"SOURCE-BOOKS" used to be written as auxiliary material, and were used to give a flavor of authenticity to the history textbooks. As such, they were disconnected and could only be read profitably in connection with the secondary text. This book is different, in that it is a fairly consecutive account of the settlement of the West as written by contemporaries, some of whom actually participated in the process of westward expansion. Excellent editing provides the nexus which binds the various accounts together in an orderly composite of narrative and description.

As a result, the book has the true feel of the moving frontier. A large number of illustrative maps and reproductions of old photographs, engravings, and paintings add much to the usefulness of the book. In view of the revival of public interest in the early history of the West, this "book of readings on our changing frontiers,"—to quote its subtitle—has a particularly timely interest.

The Profession Of Persuasion

Something About Our Six Thousand Lobbyists

The Standing Army Of Special Interests

By Sir Willmott Lewis.

IN THE FIRST VOLUME of Bryce's "American Commonwealth" it is noted that the arrangements of the Congressional committee system "have produced and sustain the class of professional lobbyists, men, and women too, who make it their business to "see" members and procure, by persuasion, importunity, or the use of inducements, the passing of bills, public as well as private, which involve gain to their promoters." Mr. Kenneth Crawford's book is a record of the operations of some of "The Pressure Boys," as he calls them, and it throws light upon much that is committed in the name of the constitutional right of petition.

The author, I am sure, would not complain of persuasion or importunity sincerely given to the public interest, though I imagine that—with many others—he would insist that much evil can be wrought by men whose equipment does not run beyond sincerity. He is concerned, however, with the agents of private interest, either plainly identified or thinly disguised, the troublesome camp-followers of the legislative forces.

There are some legislators among them who are able to forget public welfare in their desire for personal advantage, and the rest are what he calls "peddlers of personal influence" or "paid propagandists." Their exploits are too little recorded in the public prints, and "yet, collectively, they constitute a sort of phantom fourth branch of the government."

AMATEUR LOBBYIST

Noel Carter,actress who testified about the "beauty lobby" in the recent trial of William P. Buckner, jr., growing out of the Philippine bond scandal. This form of lobbying is, of course, crude and antiquated compared with the highly developed techniques described in "The Pressure Boys"

THE HUMAN INTEREST of the book is in the long parade of individuals and organizations which it marshals under the eye of the reader; its political value, which is great, is in the cumulative effect of the instances given. Mr. Crawford quotes from a decision of the Supreme Court (in Trist v. Child) denying judgment to a lobbyist who had sued for payment under a contract to influence legislation, in which it was asserted that if such instances "were numerous, open and tolerated, they would be regarded as a measure of decay of public morals and degeneracy of the time."

They are numerous, as Mr. Crawford shows, and many members of Congress have often enough complained; and they are as open as they can be on this side toleration. The author says that "about 6,000 more or less active lobbyists operate in the National Capital now."

The prototype of the lobbyist was the "boss," and he is almost as dead as the dodo. Why? For the simple and sufficing reason that as the years went by, and our politico-economic life grew more complex, the points of contact between government and business multiplied so prodigiously that no single man could touch them all. The "boss" was perforce broken up into fractional currency—the lobbyists. They are the agents of special interests.

But there is nothing inherently wicked in a special interest; every man has one, and some have more. We might condemn a pyromaniac who sought to abolish fire-brigades; we could understand a large property-holder who desired to reduce taxes. There are, no doubt, a number of special interests, like those of the burglar, the drug-peddler, the trafficker in vice, which are demonstrably wrong in themselves. The great mass of special interests, however, are not perverse, or only contingently so.

That is to say, they are entitled to act freely in fulfillment of the right of petition—unless and until they seek special privilege. The sin against society and the corruption of democratic government everywhere flow, not from special interests, which are the expression of our manifold diversity, but from the demand for and the grant of special privilege to any of those interests.

MR. CRAWFORD'S BOOK tells a tale which points this moral, and it deserves to be widely read. He is a liberal, and a warm-hearted one, which cannot be said of all liberals. He laments that "except for organized labor, there is no large pressure group consistently on the side of liberalism." He wants more white-collar unions, to cooperate with organizations of manual workers; he wants the "low-income groups" organized also; but even so he feels that "no great progress can be made until the hard-pressed middle classes learn that their destiny is bound up with the welfare of fellow-workers at the bottom, not the owners at the top."

In sum, he finds that pressure from the Right is insufficiently counterbalanced by pressure from the Left, that the equipoise is lacking which maintains the general interest.

This is government in the form of the Gothic arch, illustrating the principle of thrust and counter-thrust, of which a good deal can be read in the writings of John Adams and James Madison. Adams assumed that every government must be subjected to the unceasing pressure of rival interests, and he wished to provide that the selfishness of one group should be neutralized by the counter-selfishness of another.

In the tenth number of the Federalist, Madison writes of every civilized society as divided into groups and classes possessing various kinds and amounts of property, landed, mercantile, industrial, creditor, debtor and labor interests. He also believed that men had "different and unequal faculties of acquiring property," and that rule by the majority must be countered by other forces if it is not to end in the destruction of the public good and the end of private rights.

It is to be observed that Mr. Crawford is frequenting august company. He makes out a good case for his beliefs, and supports it by many significant instances. Late in the first quarter of the present century Mr. Hoover, then Secretary of Commerce, was also noting with some perturbation the growth of great national organizations representing the special economic interests of different classes—banks, merchants, employers, workers, farmers. Mr. Hoover asked whether these organizations would "expand their claims for special favor in the community into a great conflict," or would move toward cooperation.

In the event of conflict he feared that the whole fabric of national life would "go by the board;" cooperation, on the other hand, would enable the United States to lay "the foundation of a new national era." Mr. Crawford suggests a more exact counter-balance of forces, Mr. Hoover wants cooperation; it is possible that Adams and Madison would tell them that in either case the result would be the same.

But "The Pressure Boys" should remind us that there was good reason for Lord Bryce's reference to the Congressional committee system as the producer and sustainer of the professional lobbyist. The prodigious growth in numbers and power of these committees is a by-product of that failure to connect in their operation the executive management and the legislative assembly which Justice Story lamented in his Commentaries on the Constitution. The committees stand, so to speak, at the gateways of legislation, and it is toward them that the agents of private interest turn.

In "The Pressure Boys" you may watch them at work. The lobby army, says Mr. Crawford, is "small enough to be overlooked in normal times, but big enough to fight a Central American boundary war," and he sees them "burning the bridges between the voter and what he voted for." A defense of lobbyists has yet to be written, perhaps because it would be so difficult to write.

The Prarie Farmer's Chaning World

By Henry J. Haskell.

It was in 1896 that William Allen White, the kid editor of the Emporia Gazette, flashed across the national sky with his editorial, "What's the Matter With Kansas." It voiced the convictions of the Mark Hanna conservatives of the day; voiced them with a brilliance that was beyond the reach of the dominant oligarchy. The views the young editor expressed reflected those of the country banker, who in those dear dead days gave the leadership to the Western farmers.

The generation and a half that has passed since the free silver campaign has marked a transformation in Western attitude, and Mr. White has been transformed with the farmers of the prairie States for whom he speaks. The transformation of the farmers has been due to economic pressure that has broken down the country banker leadership and transferred power to the old farm bloc in Congress and to the elective leaders of the farm organizations. Mr. White has observed this economic pressure and has meditated on it. His own transformation he has called "the decay of a conservative."

This little book is a real contribution to an understanding of what is commonly known as the farm problem—although, as Mr. White points out, there are a dozen different farm problems—which has bedeviled the Nation since the collapse of the speculative war boom in the early '20s. What sort of a civilization was built west of the Alleghanies as a result of the great westward trek that followed the Revolution? What were its dominant factors? What happened to create these various farm problems? What is their significance, and what is to be done about them?

William Allen White himself is an authentic product of that westward movement. He tells how his grandfather, John White, and his grandmother, migrated to northern New York and then moved to the Western Reserve in Ohio. Their caravan, as he says, had a physical equipment little different from that of Abraham and Sarah when they came out of the land of Ur. The difference was in mental attitude. John and Fear White had the heritage of freedom. The initiative of free and self-reliant man and women, applied to a new and fertile country, produced the Wetsern type of civilization.

It differed from the civilization of the rapidly industrialized East by being predominantly a middle class civilization, largely the product of the little white Protestant church, and the little red schoolhouse. Its economic foundation, Mr. White believes, was "the vast increment of wealth from the rising price of virgin land." And he adds; "Economists may come along and shatter the hypothesis." They probably will. It is part of the economic folklore of the Western farmers that their profits, until about the end of the World War, came from the rise in land values. What really happened was that land values reflected the earning power of the land, actual and speculative. The mere increment in land values did not give the farmer a larger income. Indeed it diminished the income of the late comer by increasing the interest he had to pay on his capital investment. But the knowledge of the increment gave a sense of prosperity. It provided a credit basis for borrowing more money. The individual who wanted to retire could cash in on it. His family could profit if the estate were divided at his death. But the mere increment itself did not mean new wealth to the community as a whole.

The earning power of the land increased from the increasing demands for its products with the growth of population and with the development of foreign markets. Land values temporarily skyrocketed in the speculative era of high prices in the latter part of the war and immediately thereafter. Then with a farm plant vastly overexpanded to meet fleeting demands, and with increasing production due to farm mechanization, came the terrible collapse of the '20s.

Mr. White rightly suggests that in their years of prosperity the farmers became used to a standard of living which they will not readily abandon. It was their insistence on maintaining this standard, with its motor cars, hard roads, good school plants, that flowered in the efforts of the farm bloc in Congress in the Coolidge and Hoover administrations and in the great experiments of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration of the New Deal. Mere subsistence farming has been definitely rejected.

So far these experiments have proved makeshifts. Mr. White believes that the solution of the farm problem is bound up with a general increase in prosperity for the whole country—in a larger production of goods and chattels. This can come, he feels, only with getting more power out of the fuel for the machines. Here again economists will return to the attack. More power from fuel would be helpful. It would not restore balance to an unbalanced economic structure.

But the account of the West given in this book, including its farm economic folklore, provide a vivid picture of a vital part of the American democratic scene.

The Eclectic Epicure

By Scott Hart

WITH WHIMSICALITY and an extraordinary fidelity to detail, Mr. Charles H. Baker, jr., has done "The Gentleman's Companion," a two-volume work on fine drinking and eating. Years of world-wide research are in these splendid books with the strong implication that Mr. Baker's liver never let him down.

Indeed, one of the volumes, "Around the World with Knife, Fork and Spoon" is dedicated to his "handsome digestive tract," while the other, "Around the World With Jigger, Beaker and Glass," takes assurance from St. Paul's mandate in 1 Timothy, v:23.

A believer that men are better cooks than women, Mr. Baker devotes himself to the masculine audience. Here is no cold hash of recipes; rather each is a provocative item, suggesting the thrill of discovery. It is practical stuff, too.

The dozens of recipes, for food and drink, require little that is not easily obtainable in any civilized community. One with no concerns for the ways of the gourmet—with no intention of taking anything but a straight unabashed slug of liquor—may nonetheless delight in the symphonies that surged through Mr. Baker when, as was so often the case, he discovered something that made his salavary glands tinkle like the chimes of a clock.

Of course, there have been great cook books and drink books. But few, if any, have been written, Mr. Baker's from the explorer's heart. His dissertations on soups are excellent; his critique on the "three meticulous observances in the construction of any mixed drink" is a masterpiece. His several formulas for mint julep may not stop the universal argument about true constituents of that great American institution, but they will, if followed exactly, produce poetry.

Here is how Mr. Baker presents a recipe:

"Blaklava Special No. 1, as brewed for us by one Capt. Ferguson, shipmate of ours around the world in 1926 and late of His Majesty's Bengal Lancers, one-time stationed in the Punjab, northern India. This very unusual cocktail is dedicated to the spot made famous by the Charge of the Light Brigade which was a spectacular, tragic and rather unnecessary military gesture—Fill a small stemmed wine goblet brimming full with shaved ice—or very finely cracked ice. Into this pour one jigger each kummel and cognac. A dash of any red sirup, like grenadine, is optional and pretty."

Or the Colombo Flying Fish: "Take one jigger of dry gin, put in one dash of peach bitters, one-half pony of yellow Curacaco; one-half teaspoon of maraschino; then shake with plenty of cracked ice and served with proper flourish in a Manhattan glass, garnished with a slice of orange."

Or again: "We have found that when peach bitters are not too readily available that a parallel, and most delicious alternative, is to figure the Curcao and bitters idea entirely, substituting one-half pony of Cordial Medoc—a lovely French liqueur based on peach pits and other delicate Gallic interpretations, it is readily procurable at any spirits shop and Americans should make its acquaintance—not merely stopping with Benedictine and cointreau."

The cookery book takes the same sort of approach. Both sparkle with observations and suggest the origins and developments of the dishes. There is tremendous detail and the fine overtone of Mr. Baker's personality. In it, to be sensed, is also the will of a pioneer scientist who must have borne himself through moments of internal suffering.

Hollywood Doctor

THE STORY of a Hollywood doctor. The scene might have been anywhere else but the Hollywood eclat has a stronger effect on the nerve centers.

Dr. Norman Blake struggles to maintain the ethics of his profession against powerful subversive forces of the movie capital. He begins as a naive intern in the city hospital. A politician tries to bribe him. Beautiful women entice him. He gets in a mess with one, and risks his reputation faking a sobriety report for his director friend, Herbie, who should have been charged with murder for drunken driving. When the politician finds this out he forces Norman from the hospital. Then Norman goes in with Dr. Hoyt, an unscrupulous quack who pampers and soothes rich movie stars for their money. But when Dr. Hoyt causes the death of Herbie, by a careless operation Norman is fed up and returns to legitimate practice and marries a pretty nurse.

It's all rather lush and somewhat indelicate.

The Fiction Harvest

By John T. Appleby

"TALES BEFORE MIDNIGHT," Stephen Vincent Benet's second book of short stories, displays a double versatility: that of a poet who writes short stories almost as well as anyone now living, and that of a short story writer who has at his command many different moods within that medium.

The volume opens with "Into Egypt," a delicate and beautiful sketch of the flight of the Jews from an unnamed but easily identifiable country, as seen through the eyes of a young lieutenant in command of one of the border posts. In its economy of word and incident it betrays most surely the hand of the poet. It is by far the best of the group.

The second group, of five tales, displays the whimsical Benet, fertile in invention and rich in humour. He captures with equal ease the rustic charm of "Johnny Pye and the Fool-Killer" and the Irish wit of "O'Halloran's Luck." "Doc Mellhorn and the Pearly Gates" is an amiable fantasy of a deceased physician who found nothing to do in Heaven, and of his exploits in the nether regions.

The next five tales are stories of modern life, with the morals not too deeply buried. They are the weakest part of the book. "Among Those Present," for example, takes 75 pages to present the sort of character that Dorothy Parker, with more wit and malice, could do in a third of the space.

The final story, "The Last of the Legions," returns somewhat in mood to the opening one. It tells of the withdrawal of a Roman legion from Britain, and the oncoming collapse of civilization is foreshadowed in tense tightly-drawn incidents whose implications become clear at last even to the thick-skulled centurion who is the narrator.

Uneven though it is, this collection of short stories should appeal to a wide circle of readers. They will find in it grave beauty, fantasy, cutting irony, and a generous dash of sentimentality.

"A CHILD OF OUR TIME," is a tragedy of the individual under a totalitarian regime. Terrible as is the fate of the individual who is persecuted by such a government, no less terrible is the effect of that regime upon those who accept it and glory in it. It is with this latter tragedy "A Child of Our Time" deals.

STEPHEN VINCENT BENET

The narrator is a youth who has no place in the post-war world. Unable to find a job or to make a living, he turns in desperation to thievery. Then the leader comes. The youth enters one of the regimented organizations which are an inseparable part of such a regime, and there he finds his niche. He rejoices in the fact that he is able to submerge his individuality beneath the ceaseless discipline, the constant supervision, the minute regimentation of his new life. No longer does he lack food or clothing or shelter. No longer need he worry about himself, what he is to do, what he will become. That is all taken care of. He lives only to avenge the Fatherland.

Then all this fine brave world crumples about him. He is wounded in the course of an undeclared war upon a small neighboring country, and becomes unfit for military service. At the same time, his faith in the Cause is destroyed by a letter that he finds upon his captain's body, after the latter had deliberately walked into machine-gun fire through shame at the scurvy part his country was playing.

Cast aside as useless, the youth goes back to civilian life to sponge upon his father, a waiter in a dingy cafe. All his old bitterness returns and is intensified as he observs the life about him.

The story moves to its somber end with a sort of shabby grandeur. We in America may read this indictment of the Nazi regime with a smug satisfaction; not all its scenes, however, are applicable only to a totalitarian country.

"VERA" is an extraordinary psychological study by the great German dramatist, Georg Kaiser. It is written as a letter to his wife from a Russian officer who dates his real death from the day when, at the Battle of Tannenberg, after the mutiny of his regiment, he assumed the uniform and identity of a common soldier who had died in the battle.

After the war and his arrival in Paris, Boris, now Stepan Gar, falls naturally in the role of a waiter, the occupation of the man whose identity he has taken over. And as a waiter he sees his wife again, now married to a rich Greek, and is not recognized. Again he sees her in Sicily, when he is the servant of a rich Englishman and she a widow. Although she sees him full in the face and talks with him at his master's villa, still she does not know him. Boris Tscherski died that day at Tannenberg, and it is Stepan Gar, the waiter, whom she sees.

This letter, written after Vera has left the villa, recounts Boris' life and describes by implication his transformation into Stepan Gar. It is a moving story of a man's treason to himself, to his country, and to those who love him. Only in the last few pages is the enormity of his punishment made clear. "Vera" is a subtle and moving book; its beauty depends as much upon what is left unsaid as upon what is written.

WE HAVE ALL READ "The Sea Tower," but under different names and by different authors. The all-devouring mother who dominates the lives of everyone about her; the ineffectual husband, drained of all vitality; the chirping old maid of a sister; the weakling son who turns to dabbling in the arts as an escape; the handsome, strong son who marries against his mother's wishes and foolishly brings his bride home; and, finally, the daughter-in-law, resolved to murder before she will relinquish her husband to his mother's domination—these are all as familiar to us as the characters of a nursery tale heard for as long as we can remember.

Hugh Walpole, has taken these, our old friends, and put them down in Cornwall to fight their old familiar battles. Mr. Walpole's talents as a psychological novelist, once so bravely displayed in "The Dark Forest," are exercised in the delineation of the mother's collapse into madness and her efforts to disfigure the hated daughter-in-law.

"The Sea Tower," is not recommended to lovers of Walpole, for it will be a sore disappointment to them, nor to those who do not know him, for it is an unfair introduction to him.

ALTHOUGH THE SCENE of "Save Me the Sun" is Tahiti, it is far removed from the ordinary South Sea Island slush. It is a clear, vigorous, clean-cut tale of a young couple who leave the complexities of San Francisco and come to an out-of-the-way island in desperation, trying to save the remnants to their love. Michael, the husband, drinks too much and wastes himself on casual amours, while his writing sinks to a lower and always lower level. Judy, who bears perhaps an aroma of the Hemmingway heroine about her, suggests the experiment as a means of getting him away from alcohol and other women's embraces and back to writing.

The story of their life among the islanders is told with gusto and enthusiasm. Their search for each other, described with tenderness and grace, is interlarded with culinary difficulties, friendships with the only convincing natives yet to appear in fiction, experiments in mead-brewing, amorous invasions by a girl whose mother was a turtle, and the appearance of a ghost from Judy's past.

The book is written out of the fulness of the author's heart. It is exciting, amusing, and delightful reading, and is greatly helped by the drawings of M. Meslin.

The Gettysburg Address

On this day, 76 years ago, President Lincoln stood on Cemetery Hill at Gettysburg and slowly spoke a few short sentences which have become a classic of American literature.

The President was not the principal orator on that occasion. He was preceded on the platform by Edward Everett, former Governor of Massachusetts, member of Congress, United States Senator, Secretary of State, Minister to Great Britain and President of Harvard. For two hours Mr. Everett had spoken before Lincoln rose, to say ten sentences in less than half as many minutes. But the polished periods of that famous orator are now forgotten. The brief and almost extemporaneous remarks of President Lincoln still go ringing down the aisles of time.

It is all but impossible for us today to visualize the circumstances under which the Gettysburg address was made. The farmers of that vicinity were then still uncovering with their ploughs the poor remains of soldiers who, in the July preceding, had fallen too thickly for proper burial. In the battle of Chickamauga, that September, the North had counted 16,000 casualties, the South an even larger number. The November elections had just sustained Lincoln against the Copperheads. But war weariness, doubt and uncertainty hung in thick clouds across the entire country. In Richmond, men knew the Confederacy could not win. In Washington, men doubted that the Union could ever be restored.

Amid the gloom and uncertainty of the period, amid the ruins of a disintegrating Nation, the calm courage of the Gettysburg Address shone out like a lighthouse beacon on a stormy night. And, with a few exceptions, men caught its message at the moment of delivery. There was legitimate editorializing in the comment of the Chicago Tribune correspondent who wired his paper from the scene that "The dedicatory remarks of President Lincoln will live among the annals of man."

They live among those annals because the spirit they embody is "not of an age, but for all time." The Gettysburg Address remains vivid because it expresses, with perfect clarity and complete sincerity, the undying faith which is essential to sustain democracy. As long as that faith endures, the remarks of Lincoln on November 19, 1863, will be remembered. And while it endures, his country will keep the pledge "that government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth."

A Dangerous Precedent

There is generally reason for gratification when a labor dispute is settled without cessation of work, particularly when governmental interests are involved. Sometimes, however, undesirable concessions are made to avoid a strike that might have political repercussions. Such appears to have been the case in the settlement agreed upon by the Federal Welfare and Recreation Association and the C. I. O. Cafeteria Workers Union last week.

Aside from rates of pay, on which both sides were willing to compromise, this controversy involved the check-off system. The union asked that fees and dues be deducted from the wages of all cafeteria workers. The association was willing to collect union fees and dues only when instructed to do so by voluntary action of individual employes. In order to avoid a strike, which might have involved picket lines around 27 Federal buildings, the association accepted union demands which are exceedingly difficult to justify.

The result is to confirm a most undemocratic form of pressure upon nonunion employes. Acting in behalf of the association, the United States Treasury deducts $1 per month from the pay of each cafeteria worker. The sum thus collected from union members goes to the union. Funds thus compulsorily collected from nonunion members are given to charity. In effect, employes of the association are forced to pay tribute in behalf of the union regardless of whether they wish to belong to it.

It is easy to see why the association, a nonprofit organization operated by Federal and District officials, objected to continuation of this arrangement. The result of such a drastic check-off is to put every employe of the association under pressure to join the union. Regardless of the desirability of effective organization of labor, coercion of this sort on the part of an agency so closely related to the Government is entirely out of place.

When the Federal Treasury is used as a mechanism to influence employes of this association to join the C. I. O., it seems only a short step to use of Federal pay checks to induce employes of the Treasury itself to join a union. The Welfare and Recreation Association has unwillingly established a precedent concerning which much may be heard in days to come.

Anglo-French Unity

The agreement between Great Britain and France providing for the pooling of financial resources, and for noncompetitive centralized purchases of war materials in neutral countries, is of great political as well as economic significance.

The aim of the accord is that complete unification of effort which was not achieved during the last war until that conflict was approaching an end. This time it has taken less than three months for the two Allied powers to complete arrangements enabling them to utilize their financial resources and their shipping facilities under a unified command for more economical and efficient prosecution of the war.

The mere fact that such coordinated effort is contemplated, and that the parties to the agreement are prepared to apportion limited supplies on an equitable basis, testifies to the strength of the bond uniting the British and French governments. It thereby serves notice upon Germany that hopes of playing one enemy against the other might as well be abandoned.

Viewed from a purely economic standpoint the agreement is important to all neutral nations, especially the United States. With purchases made for joint account through an Anglo-French committee, it will be possible to buy more economically and to avoid the rise in prices that would result from competitive bidding by rival belligerent agents. The decision to make joint use of raw materials and productive resources will also make it possible to reduce import buying of certain kinds of articles in which either Great Britain or France is deficient.

While it is estimated that British and French governmental reserves of gold, foreign exchange, and marketable securities exceed $8,000,000,000, it is evident that these funds will be used as sparingly as possible. As the London Economist pointed out recently, though Britain's reserves are large, they would not last long if employed to finance a lavish flow of wartime imports. Furthermore, liquidation of foreign securities, constituting a large part of Britain's holdings, would entail dissipation of capital assets. Eevery effort will be made, therefore, to keep buying in foreign markets at an irreducible minimum for the duration of the war.

Another striking feature of the accord is its evidence of a high degree of internal preparedness for war. The execution of extraordinary defense programs had put British and French industry on a quasi-war footing long before September. In addition, plans for comprehensive regulation of economic activities in the event of war were ready to be put to the test without delay.

This anticipatory action, as well as the promptitude with which domestic industries have been subjected to wartime regimentation, is further indication that America must not count upon any duplication of the gains that accompanied the foreign trade expansion of the last war.

Progress Toward Health

The "platform" adopted by the board of trustees of the American Medical Association can scarcely be regarded as a substitute for the Wagner national health bill. It contains some legislative suggestions, but they are too vague to constitute a national health program. The "platform" is more a statement of principles which the leaders of the A. M. A. believe should guide future relations between Government and the medical profession.

Obviously the association is groping toward new and more effective means of providing the general public with less costly medical service. It is adamant in its stand against socialized medicine or any extension of Government control over the relationship between doctor and client. Yet the public demand for more adequate medical care for medium-income and low-income groups has made a belated impression upon the leaders of the A. M. A.

The doctors are undoubtedly right in suggesting that public health and the provision of medical care are primarily local functions. They realize, however, that in many communities ample funds to safeguard health cannot be raised. So the "platform" contemplates the appropriation of Federal funds to be allocated by a Federal health agency "on proof of actual need." Grants-in-aid of health could be given, of course, without any necessity for a Secretary of Health in the Cabinet, as the A. M. A. suggests.

Another good point made by the A. M. A. trustees is that existing facilities, including hospitals, should be fully utilized before any extensive program of further construction is authorized. The percentage of hospital beds per 1,000 persons is greater in this country than in any other. While that does not mean hospital service is adequate, it does emphasize the desirability of adjustment of hospital building plans to the demonstrated requirements of individual communities.

It is encouraging to find the A. M. A. indorsing prepayment plans for distribution of the costs of medical care and hospitalization. That organization appears to be far more alive to its obligation of leadership in this field than it was a few years ago. Undoubtedly such experiments as that the Group Health Association in Washington, and such legislative proposals as that of Senator Wagner, have had a stimulating effect upon the medical profession. Progress toward better health for all the people can be much more rapidly made if the A. M. A. is now ready to play the active part which should be expected from that organization.

A Chance For Television

A new phase of development for television is in prospect as a result of the report submitted to the Federal Communications Commission last week by a special investigating committee. If the recommendations of this group are accepted, commercial sponsorship of television programs will be permitted on a limited scale and the threat of an impasse in the progress of this novel medium of education and entertainment will be averted.

The FCC has been reluctant to permit commercial use of television because it is still in a stage of rapid development. But experiments are carried on at heavy cost. The interested companies are represented as being no longer willing to carry the burden unless they have some prospect of obtaining revenue from television programs. Apparently some commercial use of television is essential to insure further progress of this prospective industry.

Commissioner Craven's committee still views complete commercialization of television as being dangerous to the public interest, but it favors some relaxation in FCC rules. Strict regulation will doubtless be necessary. But visual broadcasting on a commercial basis should not be indefinitely postponed merely because many of its problems remain to be solved.

It does not appear that mere restraints are adequate to protect the public interest in television. A previous report to the FCC pointed out that "television technology stands at approximately the same point on its road of development as did the automobile business immediately prior to the advent of mass production." Receiving sets are expensive. Equipment purchased now may soon be obsolete. Yet if commercial programs continue to be forbidden and if very little equipment is sold, the industry may be arrested before its possibilities can be reasonably ascertained.

In drawing the analogy between television and the infant automobile industry the investigators failed to note that it was the public demand for automobiles that brought about mass production and made subsequent improvements possible. A comparable development in television may be expected only if it is permitted to sell its services to the public.

The high cost of automobiles and radio receiving sets, when they were first offered to the public, did not prevent improvement of those inventions and gradual reduction of costs. Perhaps the FCC has been too much concerned over the protection of individuals inclined to purchase television sets and too little concerned over the transition of this invention from the experimental to the commercial stage. In any event, it is encouraging to see the Craven committee taking a more progressive view.

Our Pocket Hitler

The trial of Fritz Kuhn, accused of embezzlement of funds belonging to the out some interesting evidence regarding German-American bund, has brought the so-called "leadership principle" to which bund members pledge allegiance. One witness is said to have defined it as an "advanced form of democracy." Others apparently think that the leadership principle gives the bund fuehrer authority to do as he pleases, even to taking the money of the organization for personal use.

This conception may seem very naive, but it is wholly in line with the thinking that guides the practice of the heads of totalitarian governments. The most characteristic feature of such forms of political organization, and one thoroughly repugnant to upholders of democratic institutions, is the refusal to make any real accounting to the people of what is done with the funds collected from them.

The fact that some of Mr. Kuhn's adherents are defenders of the right of their leader to spend their contributions as he chooses indicates that the leader has gone rather far as a gauleiter for Hitler in the United States. Therefore the attitude of District Attorney Dewey toward the accused is perhaps unduly contemptuous. Disclaiming any personal animus toward the bund leader, Mr. Dewey testified that he regarded him "as a nuisance to the community and probably a threat to civil liberties and the proper preservation of the American system, if he should become more important than he is."

If Mr. Kuhn has succeeded in persuading any substantial number of his followers that the use of organization funds to pay private bills is legitimate, it would seem that he deserves to be classified as an immediate threat to the American system rather than a potential menace.

Of Intellectual Freedom

IT IS NOT difficult to understand why a dictator should wish the most complete control over the teaching of the philosophy of the type of government by which he rules and more specifically over the interpretation of the circumstances by which he came into power. But such is the relativity of knowledge, whereby each subject of thought is ultimately connected with every other, and such is the disruptive power of thought, that he cannot risk in any field the activity of minds which are not steeped in the sacrosanct ideology he embodies. Only in a democracy is dissident opinion heartily encouraged—and not always then, as we should know who have lived under the Stars and Stripes for the last seven years.

No, if you are set, for example, to control by dictatorial methods the entire economic order of the country you will find your efforts blocked and frustrated at a hundred points unless you also control the social pattern of life. You cannot control this social pattern unless you exercise something like complete jurisdiction over the courts and over the teacher of religion, and you can hardly get anywhere with any of these procedures unless you also control secular education—that is, unless you can control thinking and its expression in critical speech and obstructive conduct.

One might suppose that subjects like higher mathematics, advanced physics and chemistry, to mention only these three, were so far removed from political implications that their doctrines could be left to develop freely for themselves. But not only do the totalitarian states quite naturally wish to determine the specific purposes to which these disciplines are directed; they also feel insecure and uneasy unless the men conducting them are known to be ardent supporters of the ruling regime. It thus comes about that no spot is to be found within the realm of scholarship and research where the repressive writ of the dictator does not run—and indeed must of necessity run if his sway is to be assured.

We have in recent years seen something strongly suggestive of these same principles at work in the United States. Dissent from governmental measurers proposed to relieve our economic necessities has frequently been branded as purely selfish and unpatriotic and many kinds of pressure have been brought to bear to force the dissentients into line. Thus far, however, the penalties attached to heresy have not been sufficiently severe materially to repress the play of critical thinking. It is said that the critics have been likely to find the income tax officials disagreeably attentive; and other well-known methods of making silence seem golden, or active support very profitable, have allegedly been indulged. Other administrations have been accused of employing similar methods and in any case have presumably acted with equally good conscience.

We must always remember that intellectual freedom on any large and generous scale is a relatively new thing in the world and, when allowed its head, it has always upset matters. Thought is inevitably a potential danger for the established order. Unrestrained freedom of thought has almost invariably been discouraged in traditional religion. The orthodox tenets of the faith, whatever they may be, are to be accepted as handed down by the authorities. In the Christian tradition Protestantism split off from the Church of Rome on this issue, only to find itself a little later involved in a new set of dogmatic doctrines of its own; and the process has gone steadily forward through the creation of many separate denominations and sects. Other religions have passed through similar experiences.

The universal fact is that only temporarily and here and there can thought be held completely in leash—which is by no means tantamount to asserting that all such free-ranging thought has been exercised intelligently and effectively. Much of it has been the fruit of ill-disciplined and emotionally unbalanced minds. Fortunately, perhaps, few people do much consecutive constructive thinking and those who do are not always gifted enough to make their thought valuable for others. Most persons run along on a rather humdrum habit schedule which calls for thinking of only the most modest dimensions. Nevertheless, it is important that they should enjoy the unimpaired right to exercise such capacities for thought as they possess.

Certainly in the political and social sphere and in that of practical ethics as reflected in the mores of the group, both in western Europe and in the United States, although a man might think as freely as he would he gave utterance to seriously heterodox thoughts only at appreciable peril. Poets and novelists have enjoyed a degree of license for the most part denied to men in other walks of life—and especially to teachers and priests. In countries ruled over by kings and emperors it has generally been found extremely bad for the health even to suggest the uselessness of royalty. There have been millions of human beings living under conditions of essential peonage and serfdom, to say nothing of outright slavery, who could not protest, or even allow thought to dwell unduly upon protest, without danger of brutal punishment and death.

In the matter of sex relationships, where respectable theory and actual practice have often been widely at variance, a challenge to the accepted mores (no matter how honestly and sanely conceived) has often resulted in social ostracism and political suicide, if nothing worse. Abundant other instances will suggest themselves. I have dwelt briefly on these merely to stress the point that widespread freedom of thinking directed to fundamental social, ethical, religious and political issues have been the rare exception in the world, not the rule, and that what the totalitarian states are now doing, each in its own way, is simply a reversion to a general earlier practice, albeit accomplished by methods that for sheer barbaric cruelty have no parallel in any other chapter of history known to us. I have said nothing of art, but dictators have generally been quite as sensitive to the trends in this phase of human expression as in others.

Insulin And Insanity

Insulin, by reducing the amount of sugar in the blood, deprives the brain of its chief nourishment, somehow producing a coma—well-known to all diabetes sufferers who have ever given themselves an overdose of the drug. Usually about 20 units of insulin are injected into the veins of a fasting patient early in the morning. Next day the dose is slightly increased. For the first few days he sweats, blinks, complains of drowsiness. Finally, on a day when he receives about 70 to 100 units, he sinks into a coma. His skin may turn paper-white or cherry-red, and, snoring like a horse, he puddles his bed with perspiration. After three-quarters of an hour or an hour, he is given sweet foods or glucose injections to revive him. As he gradually awakens and crosses the border of consciousness, he shouts and bellows, gives vent to his hidden fears and obsessions, opens his mind wide to listening psychiatrists.

Great danger of insulin injections is "irreversible shock," caused by too little sugar in the blood. This shock may occur when a patient is allowed to remain in coma over an hour. Even glucose will not revive a deep shock victim, and he may remain in a coma for hours, days, even weeks. Finally he may die from respiratory failure. Standard treatment for irreversible shock is blood transfusion plus glucose injections. "The dramatic psychiatric improvement following prolonged coma," wrote Drs. Joseph Wortis and Richard Hooker Lambert of Johns Hopkins Hospital last week, "suggests that if a safe method for prolongation of coma could be devised, it would further extend the value of shock treatment."

Figures vary on the beneficial results of insulin treatment. Famed Psychiatrist Edward Adam Strecker, of the University of Pennsylvania, who works at the best-equipped shock clinic in the United States, claims that 30 per cent and even 40 per cent of insulin-treated patients return to normal living. "Insulin therapy," he believes, "offers more hope in the treatment of dementia praecox than was ever offered before by any other treatment." But Psychiatrist Stanley Cobb, of Harvard, who has never personally administered shock treatment, holds that the risks far outweigh the advantages.

Only time can prove the value of insulin shock treatment. Most patients remain sane afterwards for at least a year; others, who show no good effects immediately after treatment, may take several months to "ripen" into sanity. Best results occur in young patients, between the ages of 17 and 25. But more stable is the sanity won by persons of more mature age, who do not have to contend again with the psychic hazards of adolescence. For schizophrenia victims who have been ill more than six months, there is little hope, although obstreperous patients may become gentler, more obedient after treatment. Quick treatment is important after symptoms emerge.

That insulin is a magic key to sanity, no psychiatrist believes. Says Dr. James Aloysius Flaherty, Dr. Strecker's young assistant: "It is carelessly gambling with a recovery hard-won to send a patient home without making real effort to stabilize the environment to which he must return or to exercise as many safeguarding precautions in planning his immediate course of action as are reasonably possible." Some doctors even press social responsibilities upon their patients in between injections, encourage them to work and play with other patients.

How "convulsant therapy" works, nobody knows. A score of theories have been offered, both physiological and strictly psychological. Boldest: (1) certain poisons invade the brain cells, cause schizophrenia, and shock treatment helps the body to combat these poisons; (2) the terrible fear of death caused by shock treatment inspires despairing schizophrenics to turn back to life.

What Is This War About?

A new conception of the war is spreading in informed circles, directly traceable to a single book written by a German, "The Revolution of Nihilism."

This new interpretation, briefly summarized, is that the present situation in Europe is the result of a deliberate program for world revolution, which unexpectedly to its megalomaniac plotters, turned into war. When Great Britain and France declare that they must see "Hitlerism" destroyed before they can make peace, they mean—although they have not yet framed it that way—that this purpose of world revolution must once for all be abandoned.

This is, plainly, an interpretation of the war utterly different from one that has been widely held in this country from the beginning. The somewhat obscuring word, "imperialism," has so far explained the war sufficiently for many of us. The viewpoint is that essentially this is best appraised as a resumption of the last war. That too was a struggle between two rival and rather vaguely understood "imperialisms." After 20 years the losing side has recuperated and is renewing the old challenge. The underlying economic reasons, it is presumed without questioning, are the same. The attacker is the same, the defenders the same. Therefore, in every essential, it is the same war, merely resumed. To think otherwise is to be taken in by the same poppycock which deceived us 20 years ago.

Herr Rauschning's book constitutes so complete a challenge to this common point of view that every American, for the mere clarification of his ideas, needs to be acquainted with it.

In this country, particularly, it has been assumed that the motif of the attack upon Russia represented a mere renaissance of the old pan-German ambition of Drang nach Osten (Drive to the East). This idea is simply out of date, reports Herr Rauschning. That old policy—seeking, as it did, mere wheat and oil principally—"unquestionably belongs to the past of National Socialism. It is much too unambitious, unrevolutionary, respectable, static, to interest the politicians who today determine the tactics of the Third Reich."

That policy, also, would merely have split up Russia, whereas it was complete incorporation of Russia into a leviathan Germany, which was in the minds of the Nazi leaders. The Eurasian state, which they visualized, was to stretch "from Flushing to Vladivostok."

If Plans Went Wrong

But something even more interesting with regard to Russia was in their minds. A year before it happened Herr Rauschning predicted the Nazi-Soviet Pact. This is not so remarkable for its accuracy as it now seems. Almost three years ago I personally heard it as fairly common political speculation over cafe tables in Eastern Europe. But Herr Rauschning's forecast is far more important than the common ones (which were not much more than hunches) because of the authoritative light it casts upon the Nazis' mental processes.

Suppose the first parts of this colossal program went wrong; suppose the Nazi reasoning about the willing submission of all small European states proved mistaken; suppose France did not submit to being sheared like a lamb; suppose England proved not so spineless. Suppose, in a word, the west fought! In that event, the timing would simply be changed: the second part of the grand program outlined here would be attempted first.

"It is important to bear this in mind (the author warns). If National Socialism fails in its first aims in central and western Europe . . . it will be able instead to ally itself with Bolshevik Russia and to undertake the partition of the world from the opposite pole. There are many well-known political elements who desire a solution of this sort, as avoiding the loss of time involved in proceeding by way of central and western Europe . . . In any case, dynamism sees in the volte face of an alliance with Soviet Russia a last chance which might be of incalculable revolutionary effect." (Italics mine.)

As to Hitler's personal bent and intention in this direction, Herr Rauschning testifies:

"A German-Russian alliance means simply the confluence of two streams which run toward the same sea of world revolution. National Socialism will submit to gleichschaltung with the Bolshevik world revolution or will subject that revolution to gleichschaltung with itself: it amounts either way to much the same thing. It will be no ordinary coalition between two powers for normal practical purposes. Germany and Russia, if they come together, will radically transform the world. That alliance is Hitler's great coming stroke."

Rainbow Before Stalin

Rauschning wrote this a year before the famous pact. Now these states have come together. A very common assumption has been that the alliance is a purely opportunistic one of leaders who must still profoundly distrust each other; that the fundamental antagonisms in the national interests of Slav and German remains unchanged. Stalin's course is assayed as cold-blooded taking advantage of German temporary necessity. It is all simple "power politics," of the old-fashioned variety.

This may well be true appraisal, so far as it goes. It merely does not go so far as Herr Rauschning, who keeps in mind both Hitler's past resourcefulness and his inhuman absence of scruple. There remains something he can offer Stalin that may prove one of the prettiest rainbows ever painted. He can offer to range Germany's 80,000,000 disciplined and advanced people on the side of Soviet Russia, in a consolidated relentless effort—by all the combined devices of modern warfare and modern propaganda—to overthrow the "capitalist system."

This is what Herr Rauschning means by the gleichschaltung of a Soviet Russia and Nazi Germany. This is the rainbow Hitler can paint for Stalin—with a rather enormous pot of gold at its end—Excerpted from an article by Harry Scherman in the Saturday Review of Literature.

McNutt's Progress

By Ernest K. Lindley

His Star Is Evidently Rising

PAUL V. McNUTT'S progress is one of the most notable developments on the Democratic side of the Presidential picture during the last six months. No other candidate for the Presidential nomination in either party (unless Franklin D. Roosevelt is counted) is being watched so closely by the Washington correspondents.

Two incidents occurred within 24 hours last week illustrated the minute attention that is being lavished on McNutt. On Thursday morning McNutt had an appointment with the President to discuss the social security program for the coming session of Congress. The mere announcement that the appointment had been made became the occasion for rather long newspaper stories. In some papers these stories made front-page headlines. The advance publicity probably surprised McNutt as much as anyone else. When he came out of the White House after talking with the President he said that the importance of this conference had been "overrated." The press had been right as to its facts: the appointment was for the purpose of surveying the social security program. But if McNutt were not looked upon as a promising Presidential candidate, the stories written in advance would have been brief

THE OTHER EVENT which demonstrated McNutt's political importance in the eyes of the press occurred Wednesday night. Fowler Harper, liberal lawyer whom McNutt brought from Indiana University to be counsel to the Federal Security administrator, gave a small, informal stag dinner party for President Wells, of Indiana University. McNutt, a former dean of the Indiana University Law School and a close personal friend of Wells, was present. So were some 15 or 18 other persons, most of them Government officials. Dozens of such affairs are held every week in Government circles in Washington. Most of them receive no publicity, and it was not the host's intention that this one should receive publicity.

Among his guests, however, were such prominent representatives of the New Deal school of thought as Associate Justice Hugo Black of the Supreme Court, S. E. C. Commissioner Edward Eicher and Tommy Corcoran. All three of them frequently go to dinners, formal or informal. But their presence in the same room with McNutt was interpreted as politically significant. Everett Watkins, an Indiana correspondent, wrote the story first; other correspondents took it up. Possibly Harper did invite some of his guests with an eye to the political future of McNutt as well as to the pleasure of President Wells. But McNutt already knew almost everybody in the room, including Tommy Corcoran, with whom he became acquainted last summer at an even smaller dinner party held for the express purpose of introducing McNutt to some of the members of the White House circle.

ONE INGREDIENT besides the growing political importance of McNutt was needed to convert these two episodes into columns of newspaper space. That ingredient was a dull day. But it is significant that when the absence of more dramatic events permitted their thoughts to drift to Presidential politics, the correspondents chose to dwell on the doings of McNutt.

The task of breaking down hostility to McNutt in the liberal wing of the Roosevelt Administration was begun several months before McNutt returned from the Philippines, by one of his closest friends and associates: Wayne Coy. Coy was highly thought of by Harry L. Hopkins, under whom he had served in various capacities. He was well and favorably known by the public welfare experts, and by a number of miscellaneous liberals in the Administration. Coy's ice-breaking had something to do with the President's decision to offer McNutt the post of Federal Security administrator.

When McNutt took over his new job he immediately established contacts with various New Dealers. He sought the advice of Lauchlin Currie, the liberal Federal Reserve Board economist who shortly afterward was made an assistant to the President, and of Alvin Hansen, liberal economist of Harvard University. Most of the agencies placed under McNutt are manned by liberals. He set out to cultivate their friendship and loyalty.

In the appointments to his own staff he chose mostly persons of recognized liberal tendencies. In his speeches McNutt has been committing himself to the tenets of liberal democracy. No member of the Administration has set forth these tenets more foscefully than McNutt did in his address at Lakeland, Fla., on November 12. He applied the principles of democracy to our economic as well as our political life. He said, for example:

"To avoid disaster, democracy must afford relief by extending political freedom to include, so far as possible, economic freedom by enlarged opportunity. The necessary steps in this process are, first, to provide guarantees of minimum security and, second, to extend facilities for the individual to help himself. Government cannot make all men equal. It cannot put asunder what nature has wrought in the individual. It can, however, make even the distribution of political power and establish standards of security within the limits of the Nation's resources and technological facilities. It is perfectly feasible to establish an economic floor below which no American citizen, however otherwise unfortunate, can fall. The ultimate success of democracy will depend upon the maintenance of such a foundation."

AS AN ECONOMIC SYSTEM for our democracy, McNutt rejects all doctrinaire ideas. He does not believe we are going to drift toward and finally arrive at state socialism or state capitalism. Neither does he believe that we can exist in an economy built on the hard-and-fast rules of the classical economists. McNutt said at Lakeland:

"The experience of America, as indeed the experience of all democracies, has been one of synchronizing two systems of economics. We have always had a mixed economy under which the task has been the proper co-ordination of the principle of government planning with the principle of the free play of economic forces . . . No government geared to . . . (a) . . . theoretically pure economic system has been able to withstand the onslaught of economic forces over an extended period."

McNutt's observations are so thoroughly in accord with experience that they may not sound startling. But contrast them with the thousands of political speeches made during the last few years in which every step toward greater Government planning has been denounced as the first step on the road to fascism or communism or totalitarianism. There have been many speeches from the New Deal side also which were quite as doctrinaire in their economic ideas.

McNutt's practical view makes a great deal of this theorizing unnecessary. Like all other democracies, we live in a mixed economic system—and a mixed one which is continually changing.

McNutt is conducting his preconvention campaign on the theory that no one can be nominated without Roosevelt's approval. At the same time he has his own political base in Indiana, whose delegation to the national convention will be solidly for him.

He may not have many first-ballot delegates from outside Indiana, but almost certainly he will be the second, third, or fourth choice of a great many delegates. Daily he is making it more difficult for the President to raise any valid objection to his nomination, and it is conceivable that he will become the President's first choice among the candidates who have enough political strength to round up delegates.

JIM FARLEY'S personal hostility to McNutt seems to be unabated. Farley's attitude is a real obstacle in McNutt's way. But Farley's hostility is ostensibly due to McNutt's refusal to play ball at the national convention of 1932. If that is the real reason, and Roosevelt doesn't object to McNutt on that account, it may be difficult for Farley to stand firm.

McNutt is still a long way from the Presidential nomination. But nobody else seems to be much, if any, closer. With the possible exception of Cordell Hull, he is the only Democratic candidate who has made marked progress during the last six months.

Nation's Tribute

Writer Praises Monument to Jefferson

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Thomas Jefferson was in France as minister, succeeding Benjamin Franklin, discharging his duties in an eminently satisfactory manner, when the Constitutional Convention was in session. His general views were known amongst his friends in the convention, and doubtless had great influence, through his wide personal correspondence. While he was absent in France, engaged with his duties there, his life-long friend, James Madison, forwarded him a draft of the Constitution.

Jefferson was alarmed at its defects. There was no bill of rights properly safeguarding the liberties of the citizens or the States. No safeguard to that old menace to a free people, a large standing army and the quartering of soldiers in any house without the consent of the owner. Freedom of religion, and freedom of the press were not guaranteed. The right of "habeas corpus" was not made secure. Furthermore, there was no provision against Presidents succeeding themselves indefinitely.

The absence of all these very fundamental provisions went against Jefferson's political creed. He was greatly troubled—history of governments had taught him the lurking dangers. And while he appreciated the perilous condition of his country without a constitution he very reluctantly gave his support to the instrument relying on early amendments to cure its dangerous defects.

Jefferson was a practical statesman, he never contented himself with laying down abstract principles, but he sought to give them vitality by embodying them in legislation. Notwithstanding his indication of acquiescence in the idea of the convention, Jefferson admitted "the great mass of good in it," yet he did not hesitate to denounce certain features of the Constitution.

In 1787 in a letter to John Adams he asked "How do you like our new Constitution? I confess there are things in it which stagger all my dispositions to subscribe to what such an assembly has proposed . . . Their President seems a bad edition of a Polish King. He may be elected for from four years to life."

Subsequently in letters to Madison and others, he enlarged upon these objections and included in his denunciation, among the more important, "the omission of a bill of rights, "providing clearly and without the aid of sophism, for freedom of religion, freedom of press, protection against standing armies, restriction of monoplies, the eternal and unremitting force of the Habeas Corpus laws, and trial by jury in all matters of fact triable by the laws of the land, and not by the laws of nations."

After much discussion and consideration he finally yielded (in order to get ratification by the States) on all objections except as to the omission of a bill of rights and the reeligibility of the President. As to these, he was immovable.

His position was, with reference to a bill of rights, that it should guard against the encroachment of Government upon individual liberty. To use his own language, he believed that, "The natural progress of things is for liberty to yield, Government to join ground." He wrote to Count de Mustier in 1788, "I see in this instrument a great deal of good, there are, indeed some faults, which revolted me a good deal in the first moment; but we must be contented to travel on toward perfection, step by step, we must be contented wtih the ground which this construction will gain for us and hope that a favorable moment will come for correcting what is amiss in it."

After all is said, Jefferson's political philosophy goes deeper than the interpretation of the words of any written Constitution or the Declaration of Independence. It is founded in distrust of the rulers over the people, that free Government must rest on the consent of the governed; that a peoples' Government should be founded on jealousy of the peoples' natural rights, and not in confidence of the wisdom and superior abilities of rulers.

Individualism should be looked to and not paternalism, hatred of caste, and no bestowal of distinctive titles, not based on merit and service to the Nation; dispersion amongst the people, not concentration of power; education of all the people, with supreme faith in their capacity for self Government.

The monument whose cornerstone was laid last week by the President will complete the Nation's tribute to three of its greatest Presidents—Washington, Jefferson and Lincoln.

Excerpts From Our Letters

The Great I Am

I venture to suggest to Mr. Pegler that he use his vitriolic pen against the destructive forces which infest this land from border to border and lay off a wholly constructive activity especially one about which he knows literally nothing. You see I give Pegler the benefit of the doubt by assuming that he is a patriotic American citizen.—R. H. Todd, Washington.

Seat Of Judgment

When Mr. Pegler has expended as much of the God-given energy of his own life for the encouragement, the assistance, the happiness of discouraged, unhappy humanity as have Mr. and Mrs. Ballard, then may he be entitled to sit in the seat of judgment.—Elizabeth Vick, Washington.

Second Language

Spanish should be the second language learned by every American. From a business point of view, while not as rich as French or German, it has resources which will never be exhausted by any American student. Cervantes's writings are in no sense inferior to Shakespeare's. Lopez de la Vega's plays show as keen an insight into human nature as do those of the great English dramatist.—W. Francis Colton, Washington.

"Good Forces"

Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Ballard, and their "I am" teaching, which I have studied for six years, are a concentration of good forces affecting public opinion constructively and of great importance to the welfare of any of the individual students, their families, and to the strengthening of the stability of our Government in these troubled times.—Isabel S. Wesley, Washington.

Texas Powers

Garner for President—what a victory for the conservative element of America! We are certainly hard up for presidential timber if we find none other than a 71 year old man. The liberty minded elements of America had better get busy before Texas with Garner and Dies seizes power and completely "overthrows" all liberalism in our government today.—A Post Reader, Washington.

The Letter "T"

I wonder if our President has ever been told that he has never pronounced that simple little five lettered word "often" correctly over the radio. I have never seen a dictionary in the English language which it tells one to pronounce the letter "t" in this word "often." Maybe Roosevelt's orthographical pioneering will be remembered by historians as well as his legislative and executive pioneering.—Henry Stoner, Washington.

Waste Of Time

I feel that Congress should decide whether or not we should send our boys to Europe to fight for one or the other causes. It would be a waste of time and a roundabout way of getting information if it were put before the people.—Felippe A. Broadbent, Washington.

Transfer To Panama

In the days when we did not observe, or regard, as vice the art of national grabbing, we, by indirect means, took Panama from Colombia, and internationally incorporated it for our benefit. More recently, we held a little international conference in Panama for the modest purpose of augmenting trade and grabbing large spheres of the high seas. Now we seek to utilize our holding company to accomplish indirectly what we assured the world we sought to avoid. We would transfer our flags to Panama.—G. M. Dillard, Scottsville, Va.

Cause Of Communism

Dies and his committee had better set out to seek the causes of communism and to effect remedies incidental thereto rather than making useless efforts to stamp out through force and intimidation a concept resulting directly from a maladjusted social economy.—Post Reader, Washington.

Consent Of The Governed

The acquisition of non-contiguous territory and non-homogenous population involves the fundamental issue of changing the character of our Government from a Democratic Republic where the powers of the Government are derived from the consent of the governed to that of an empire which exercises arbitrary dominion over far-flung land and people without let or hindrance. Abraham Lincoln's definition of a democracy as a Government of the People, for the People, and by the People is inconsistent with the imperialistic idea.—Kelly Miller, Washington.

Need For Investigation

And now Dies, will widen his influence and investigate consumer. The only larger field possible is the entire human race, and the Lord knows there are some members of it who needs investigating.—Charles E. Planck, Washington.

For A Referendum

Please know that your page in The Sunday Post with the National Leaders discussing the War Referendum proved most interesting to me. As I have a son and grandson, needless to write I am most decidedly on the "yes" side. —Amy M. Balch, Washington.

Saints—Old And Modern

The Saints of the early church did not kill people and Christians of the twentieth century do not have to commit murder for Hitler, Uncle Sam, John Bull, Japan, etc., anymore than they did for Nero and Diocletian.—Earl A. Cripps, Miami, Fla.

Searching Investigation

If I were looking for "sordid" procedures, I would not turn to the Dies Committee to look for it. There is no doubt that all loyal and true Americans desire that this committee shall make a thoroughly searching investigation.—Carreda, Roanoke, Va.

D. C. Government

Mr. Finch Further Clarifies His Position

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In attempting, in your editorial of November 14, to clarify your position on the question of District reorganization, you have represented me as assuming a position on the same subject which is not justified by anything which I have ever said or written. For the sake of the record, therefore, permit me to simplify what I believe to be our respective positions.

You seek a reorganization of our outmoded municipal organization into a modern, efficient and economical government. I have never objected to such a proposal, and I do not now object to it. In fact, I have consistently supported it as long as, if not longer than, you have.

To attain that end, you believe it necessary that there should be a local governing body with all the powers exercised by similar bodies in other communities. I have advocated that on every appropriate occasion during the six years that I have been discussing local governmental problems. And I now advocate it.

You have contended that the local governing body should be made up of local citizens representative of the community. And I have been happy to lend my feeble voice to the ever-swelling chorus of District people who also have been contending for the same thing.

But there we part.

I have contended, and still contend, that if the local governing body is to be given such broad municipal powers as you and I agree it should have, and if its members are to be representative local citizens as you and I have also agreed they should be, then the method of choosing those members should be that which is the accepted American standard, through the suffrages of the people over whom that body is to rule.

You claim not to oppose that method, yet, because you feel that there is opposition in Congress to that method, you are willing, and are actively working, to secure a plan of reorganization in which the members of the governing body will continue to be appointed as heretofore. My view, as you know, has behind it the full weight of American history, law and precedent, and recent newspaper accounts indicate that some of our local officials have expressed a similar view.

I have contended, and still contend, that if the members of the governing body are not to be chosen by, and therefore, responsible and responsive to the people, but are to be appointed as heretofore, then we will have to face exactly the same circumstances which caused Mr. Merlo J. Pusey, writing in The Post on February 15, 1939, to make such a strong indictment of our present Board of Commissioners, namely, that the Engineer Commissioner is not representative of the community and that the two civilian posts on the board "have often been used as rewards for politicians with little knowledge of or interest in Washington as a community."

It is on this most important point that your attitude toward reorganization is inconsistent, unintelligible and greatly in need of clarification. You know that the present organic law of the District requires that the Board of Commissioners (our present governing body) shall be composed of an officer in the Engineer Corps of the United States Army and two persons appointed from civil life who must be citizens of the United States, a resident of the District for the three years next preceding appointment, and must not have claimed residence elsewhere during that period.

What other safeguards would you or could you include in a new organic act to prevent the civilian posts in the present governing body, if continued, or in a new one, if established, from being similarly used? And if they are similarly used, can you not visualize the deleterious effect that would have upon the other branches of the government, no matter how beautifully streamlined?

Finally, you are wholly unfair to me when you say that I advocate a policy of suffrage or nothing. In none of my public utterances or writings can you find any basis for such an accusation. I have contended, as above indicated, for a complete reorganization of the local government, including in the word "complete" the popular election of our local governing body at least. But I have never even used the word "suffrage" in connection with any branch of our local government except the governing body.

President,
D. C. Suffrage Association.

Cisatlantic Trade

By W. L. Schurz

Our Latin-American Opportunity

NOW THAT we have started another drive to capture the trade of Latin America, what are the problems involved?

Though no year can be taken as entirely normal, the preliminary figures of the Department of Commerce for 1938 are representative enough of general conditions and trends to serve our need for the necessary evil of statistics. According to these figures, the twenty republics imported goods last year to the value of approximately $1,400,000,000. Something over one-third, 35.8 per cent, of these came from the United States. That is more than twice the total imports from Germany (17.1 per cent) and the United Kingdom (12.2 per cent). The rest came from other European countries, Canada, Japan—only 2.7 per cent—and from one another. Thus, commercial interchange between Argentina and Brazil accounts for a very sizeable share of the foreign trade of both. Peru imports more from Argentina than from France and Italy combined, and more than 10 per cent of Uruguay's imports come from her two big neighbors.

FOR OUR PURPOSE imports into Latin America may be roughly classed as bulk goods and manufactured or processed goods. The former include iron and steel in the form of bars and sheets, structural shapes, wire, rods and tubing; coal and cement; and such lines as wood pulp, cotton yarn, caustic soda, tinplate and copper for fabricating. Quality plays a small part in this heavy business, and orders are placed on a basis of price, and credit and delivery terms.

On big orders competition is likely to be fierce and prices are shaved until the margin of profit is small for any but the low-cost producer. Though some of the ordinary European sources of some of these materials will be badly deranged by the war, favoring our position in the market for the time being, our ability to hold any substantial part of our gains will depend on Europe's ability to recoup her losses on the usual conditions.

The second group of imports includes machinery and parts, textiles, processed foodstuffs and a great variety of miscellaneous manufactures. Here quality, buying habits and reputation of the manufacturer are important factors. On a long-time basis, this is the real battleground of Latin American trade. The channels of much of this trade are well established, as in the case of American automobiles and office appliances, Italian olive oil and French pharmaceuticals and wines. Certain trademarked specialties, like Borsalino hats from Italy, Collins machetes from Connecticut, and Lea & Perrins' Worcestershire sauce, or Salsa Inglesa, are standbys with sections of the public in Latin America, and it would require more than a mere war to affect their postion permanently in these markets.

BESIDES THESE hard-core pockets of trade, there is a vast field of free-for-all competition, in which the opportunities for improving our situation more than temporarily would appear to be promising. These include such important lines as machine tools and more specialized industrial machinery and supplies, electrical equipment, farm implements, railway rolling stock, airplanes, heavy chemicals and prepared foodstuffs. Though textiles would seem to belong in the same category, there are special obstacles to be met in that field. Cotton piece goods have long constituted the backbone of England's exports to Latin America, and she may be expected to make every effort to hold as much of this business as possible for her Manchester mills.

Due to the growth of domestic textile industries in some of the countries, imports of cottons have fallen off considerably, until the market is gradually being confined to the better grades. The same fate probably awaits the bulk of the Latin-American business in woolens and rayon. Though England still has the lion's share of the Latin-American textile trade, there is a very considerable balance of imports from other countries. For example, last year Argentina bought over $26,000,000 worth of textiles from Italy, Germany, Belgium and France, in the order named.

A number of circumstances have determined the relative standing of exporting countries in the markets of Latin-America. One is geographical propinquity, which has favored us in the Caribbean area. Another is time. British trading houses were operating in the River Platte before Argentina won her independence from Spain. Moreover, the Britishers have stayed on through good times and bad. This has given them the advantage of long and continuous familiarity with market conditions and has impressed the more solid elements among the natives with British seriousness.

While the Germans are relatively late-comers, they have made up for the delay by their persistence and industry, by their readiness to depart from the orthodox technique of trade when it might serve their purpose, and by the lengths to which they have been willing to go in order to humor the whims of native buyers. German agents seldom take time out for tea or cocktails; they learn the language of the country, even though they speak it with a thick gutteral accent; and they court the natives with an assidousness that leaves the stiff-necked Britisher agog.

FOREIGN INVESTMENTS also influence the direction of trade in Latin-America. Thus, England has profited much from the circumstance that she owns the best lines in the Argentine railway system, the Leopoldina and the San Paulo in Brazil, and other lines from Cuba and Mexico south to Peru and Chile. Large American investments in utilities, mines, and other enterprises have similarly helped to bring orders to American manufacturers. However, there is much less German capital in Latin American industry and it is a minor factor in Germany's commercial penetration.

While local banking connections aid in the promotion of foreign trade, especially where a nation's trading efforts are synchronized by authoritarian government, this factor has decided limitations.

Of course, one of the major influences in deciding the course of Latin-American trade is the naturally complementary character of most of its commercial interchange with Europe. We happen to produce in quantity some of the great staples of the southern republics, which they must sell in order to buy the goods which their own industries do not produce. These include cotton, wheat, tobacco, corn, meat and fruits—except bananas. Only Europe can absorb these products and the surplus of their wool, hides and sugar in sufficient volume. Meanwhile, we take the bulk of Latin America's coffee and bananas, much of her cacao, linseed, copper, petroleum and tin (indirectly through England), and a good share of many minor products. In fact, we are, by a great deal, Latin America's best customer, taking more of the yield of her lands and mines than Germany and England combined. Last year it was more than we sold to her.

BRIEF SOLACE

By Nina Grey

There still remain the wondrous autumn hills,
The colors of ripe fruit
The friendly sun;
Golden and dreaming still the meadows lie,
Ere the first white frost glistens
And the year is done.

This is the way of earth, wrapped in deep slumber,
The harvest gathered in
A solace brief
For those who may not reap—for all their sowing
A moment's sweet forgetting
Of their grief

The forests whisper of eternal things
Deep down the ferns lie folded
Heart to heart.
All now is peace—with autumn's benediction
Yet from an old, deep anguish
The wild tears start.

International Kaleidoscope: Correspondence From Foreign Capitals

French See Time as Their Greatest Ally

Allies Expect To Be in Superior Position by Spring

By John Elliott.

Copyright, 1939, by New York Tribune, Inc.

Paris, Nov. 18.—The real war has not yet begun. Two mighty armies equipped with most formidable armaments confront each other on the Western Front. But so far these forces have engaged only in preliminary ekirmishing.

So far as the Allies are concerned, it is likely to be a long time before they are ready to launch a big offensive. They are clearly on the defensive and will certainly remain so until next spring at any rate. The British and French are convinced that time is on their side. At the present moment the Germans hold superiority in offensive material, especially airplanes. But the Allies believe their own factories can gradually make up this gap. The British official program will turn out twice as many aircraft next spring as it was producing at the outbreak of the war.

Through their command of the seas the Allies have access to raw materials and markets abroad closed to Germany. While their own production of munitions is constantly rising, the Allies by a naval blockade will put steady preassure on the Reich. Owing to an increasing lack of raw materials, German factories will as time goes on find it more difficult to turn out munitions and their products will become ever more inferior.

America's Contribution

Meanwhile, thanks to the revision of the American neutrality legislation by Congress, the Allies are in a position, owing to financial strength and naval superiority, to draw on the industrial resources of the United States. An inkling of the contribution America may make toward winning the war was given recently when nine Curtiss planes piloted by nine daring French airmen encountered 27 German Messerschmidts and brought down nine of them.

The Paris newspaper, L'Epoque, recently referred to the American Curtis pursuit planes as "those marvelous chaser planes which today are assuring us mastery of hte air." The aeronautical Chamber of Commerce of America in a survey lately conducted estimated that the American airplane industry is now capable of turning out 1,250 airplanes a month, while John H. Jouett, president of that body, has been quoted in a dispatch published in the French pres as saying this producti would reach 25,000 planes a year in December, 1940.

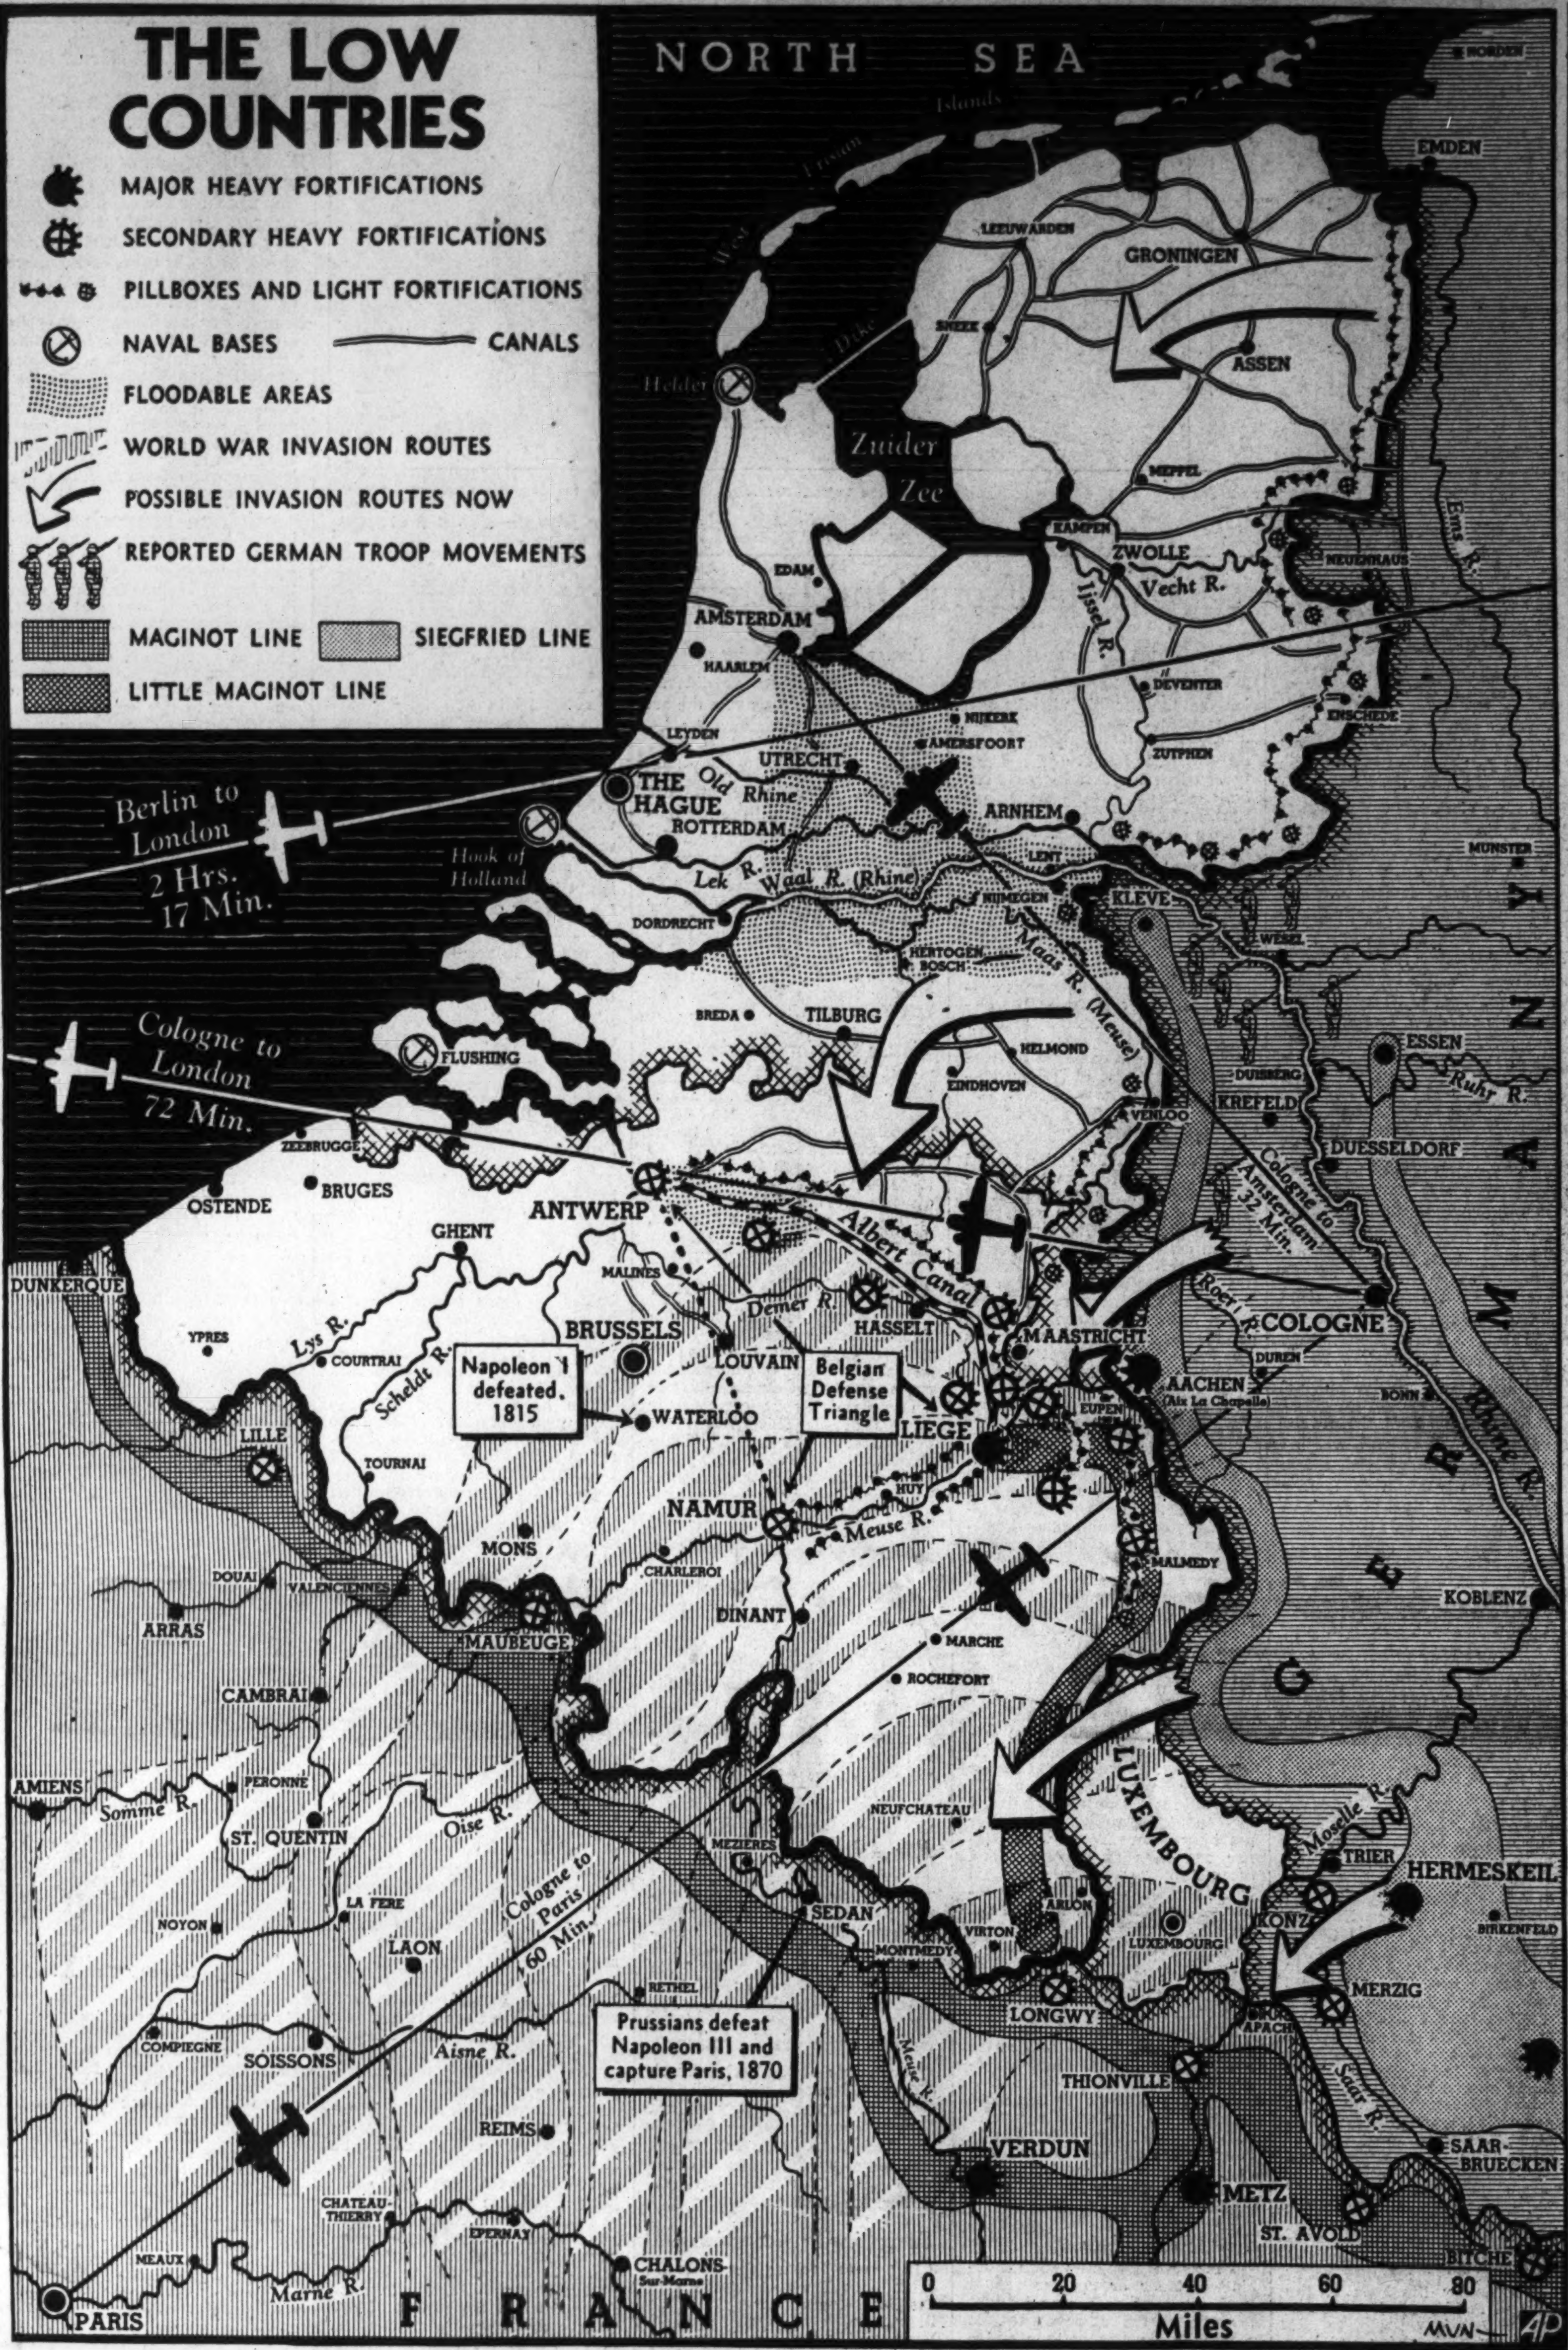
Eventually Allies Plan Big Attack

The great Allied offensive against the Siegfried Line, therefore, is likely to be deferred until the day comes when Allies have as crushing a superiority over the Germans in airplanes, tanks and gunpowder as the Germans enjoyed over the Poles at the outset of the war.

The Allies are confident that htis day is coming—the day when no German airplane will dare to take to the air, when every German troop concentration will be bombed pitilessly and when no German road near the front will be safe for travel. Then, they expect, the innumerable little pill boxes that make up the Siegfried Line will literally be blasted to pieces by the heavy artillery of the Allies while fleets of the most formidable tanks that the world has ever seen will swarm over the German lines.

Will Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler stand idly by and let the Allies accumulate this overwhelming superiority in armaments against him? Der Fuehrer's only chance of winning the war seems to be to attack now, just as the Kaiser's sole hope of winning the war in 1914 was crushing France in the autumn fo 1914.

Yet Der Fuehrer hesitates. His troops are reported massed against the Dutch frontier ready to invade the low countries and occupy them as air and naval bases for future operations against England. But the expected word from the German Chancellor does not come and each day that passes lessens Hitler's chances of winning the war. Winter is near and fog, rains and cold are allies of the British and French, hampering all offensive military operations. Like Napoleon at Waterloo, Hitler may hesitate so long as to let the hour slip when he could launch a successful attack.



Holland's premier says his country has nothing to fear from the war and Germany scoffs at reports it intends to invade the low countries. Nevertheless, Belgium and the Netherlands have been preparing for months against any eventuality—even to the test flooding of some of the lowlands. This map shows why—and why talk of an invasion is a long time dying down.

Ever since Caesar's time the warpaths of Europe have crossed the two little neutrals wedged between France and Germany. These countries provide the only land route around the fortified lines and the mountains of the Western Front. The shortest air bombing routes between London and Berlin strike across them. German air bases established in them would halve the bombing time between Germany and England. German sea bases established along their coast would greatly increase Germany's ability to menace the British naval blockade.

Would a German invasion be successful? Military men who provided the information on which this map is based say the answer depends on the German objective. If Germany tried to drive into France by getting around the Maginot Line they say the odds would be 4 to 1 against success. They reason that the Belgian, Dutch and British armies should be able to hold the invaders at the French-Belgain border. Then all the defenders, including the main French army along the Maginot Line, could counterattack. That, they say, would give the Germans too long a line to defend.

But if the Germans tried only to establish air and submarine bases closer to the British Isles the strategists say the chances of at least temporary success would be better than 2 to 1. For the main German thrust could be made through southern Holland (large arrow), with auxiliary attacks at a number of other points (smaller arrows). Military observers believe that in such a case the Belgian and Dutch armies would eventually drop back to the French border. Or the Germans might thrust through northern Holland and work down the coast—Holland's whole eastern border is vulnerable.

In any event, say the strategists, the much-talked-about flooding of Holland's lowlands would offer little defense. For the Germans could get around the floodable areas, as the map shows, and not try to fight their way through the water unless it were frozen. Besides the areas shown, though, many smaller sections might be flooded, and scores of canals in flooded areas would become invisible traps for war machines.

The Belgians, first to feel the German might in 1914, have a much more elaborate defense system than the Dutch. Its main parts are the Little Maginot Line, modeled on the French system, and the 250-foot-wide Albert Canal, which has defense units on each side.

Thanksgiving

but, according to documentary evidence. They fed upon oysters, fish, ducks, geese, venison, partridge and, of course, turkey. Vegetables there were in great abundance and variety. It was truly a session for tireless jaws, ample stomach capacities and strong toothpicks.

Until Abraham Lincoln entered the White House, Thanksgiving Day was a hit-or-miss affair. Some years the Pilgrims observed it and in others they didn't. It came sometimes in October, sometimes in November. At least once it was celebrated in February and once in June.

George Washington proclaimed several Thanksgiving Days during his eight-year administration but between his day and Lincoln's the holiday was rarely recognized by the White House. It was Sarah Josepha Hale who prevailed upon President Lincoln, in 1864, to proclaim the last Thursday in November as the National Thanksgiving Day.

The states that will follow President Roosevelt's lead and celebrate Thanksgiving on the twenty-third are California, Delaware, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Louisiana, Maryland, Michigan, Missouri, Montana, New Jersey, New York, North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Utah, Virginia, Washington, West Virginia and Wyoming. The stand-patters are Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, Connecticut, Florida, Idaho, Kansas, Kentucky, Maine, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Mexico, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Tennessee, Vermont and Wisconsin.

Texas, Colorado and Mississippi will celebrate both dates. The District of Columbia and the territories of Hawaii and Alaska have no choice in the matter and will observe November 23, as prescribed by the President.

Mr. Roosevelt already has announced that Thanksgiving Day shall fall on November 21 in 1940 and it is believed that a majority of the states will swing in line. That no more than 22 adopted the early date this year, exclusive of the three states which decided to double up, is attributed to the fact that the President gave such short notice, less than four months.

But no matter what the date, one poor fellow will still get it in the neck. Meaning, of course, Mr. Gobbler.

War Aims

M. Bruce, Australian High Commissioner at the League, and was made public in September.

While the economic and social cooperation of nations is becoming closer and is affording a better basis for political cooperation, proposals for a federal authority to crown the edifice are being developed in even greater detail by numerous sources. The proposal for a Danubian Federation, heard at the Peace Conference of 1919, is being revived, and the ancient ideal of a Scandinavian Federation is being enlarged to include the Low Countries. A broader scheme has been drafted by Count Richard Coudenhove-Kalergi, who envisages a European Continental Union including Italy and Germany.

A widely publicized project which has gained considerable public support since it was launched this spring is Clarence K. Streit's plan for a federal union of the Democracies. The United States, the nations of the British Commonwealth, France, Switzerland, the Low Countries, Finland and Scandinavia would be its first members, and other nations would be admitted when they gave proof that their governments were democratic.

Which of these plans is to be adopted and how it is to be carried out will depend upon the circumstances of the war and its outcome. The t's cannot be crossed nor the i's dotted until diplomats can again sit around a conference-table.

But meanwhile the ideas on which they are based are being explored in public and private by large and small groups of thinking men, experts in their fields, philosophers, and simple voters. The League of Nations Association is planning a commission of inquiry; the fifteenth Council on the Cause and Cure of War is soon to meet; college presidents and professors are expressing their views in speeches and articles and discussing them together in private. Englishmen and Frenchmen are examining the peace of the last 21 years to see why it led to another war, and Americans are wondering whether the New World cannot contribute the ideas instead of the armies that will "redress the balance of the Old."

When finally the green table is again set up on Europe's battlefields, the statesmen who gather around it will have a greater wealth of experience, information and moral idealism to draw on than any previous conference of plenipotentiaries has ever known. It is said today, "we must not repeat the errors of Versailles;" but the world is thinking in positive as well as negative terms. New plans are being made to build a new world, whose outlines were only dimly seen at Versailles.

The treaty, which was signed with so much hope and which was intended to create a peace in which there would be no more wars, has proved a bitter disappointment. But a new hope is in the air, and every day the guns along the Western Front hold their fire it grows stronger.

The peace to end all wars did not succeed, but perhaps the war to end wars did.

Correspondent's Diary

I will even show the shade of Floyd Gibbons, God rest his dramatic soul.

This is a modern war, and these are modern war correspondents. In the first place, we live in hotels. They will never give any serious competition to the Ritz, but they are still hotels. At first we were doubled up, two to a room, but other guests since have left, and now each man has a room to himself. The food is excellent, the beds are at least clean, and there is a bathtub which does not leak despite its other quite evident faults.

So to begin with, we are well housed, well-fed, well-clothed. Then as to work. We get up every morning about 7, have hot chocolate and croissants fresh from the oven, and off we go to war.

The war office has done us proud on transportation. There is a small car with a soldier driver for every two correspondents, there is a conducting officer, and we can pretty well choose for ourselves where we will spend the day. We tell our conducting officer we would like to see the front-line trenches, or the tanks, or the air units attached to the army, and off we go.

We see anything we want to and we talk to whom we like. Then of course the censors go to work on our copy and cut out anything which conceivably might be of interest or comfort to the enemy or even be lifted by Goebbels' methods and twisted into Nazi propagnada. But that's fair enough; this is, so we have read in the newspapers, a war.

Well, that's how you get your news of this war and we, cold and wet as we return to our cosy little hotel, hope that your interest is sufficient to justify our effort.

With the British Expeditionary Force on the Western Front.—In normal times only a fool-hardy man makes positive and unequivocal statements. In time of war only a fool says promptly what he will do or will not do even so far ahead as tomorrow.

Before I left London for this British war front in France, I told in these pages of the war office offer to let us take men servants with us to the war. I, an ex-police reporter who had been through most of the mills, scoffed at the idea. I ended that page of this diary with the smart Alec crack that poppa could still pull on his own pants.

But, ladies and gentlemen, poppa has a man servant. We call them batmen in this man's army, but he is a soldier's equivalent of a valet anyway you look at it. There are, however, extenuating circumstances. I would like to get them on the record.

The door opened and two English kids came in, saluted nad stopped at my table. They were ordinary London kids in the ugly battle uniform of hte modern army; a little thin of chest, a little pasty of complexion. The younger, the thinner, the pastier of the two made his report:

"Begging your pardon sir," he said, "we're your batmen."

I was at first a little bit embarrassed, then a little bit angry, but finally (reason is always a latecomer at hte feast of wisdom spread by my mind) a little bit interested. I talked to this kid, and here is his story.

He and his pal lived all their briet years in the East End of London near the grim Tower. They were of humble folk and sometimes (I think oftener than was indicated) there was not always champagne and a hot bird on the home table. They were both employes of a wholesale wine house, rolling the big barrels, selling hogheads of beer, checking the supplies.

Then came the war and on September 1 they were called to the colors, in a rifle regiment, and at last they came to France. The boy who spoke to me is named Charles Richard Clark, but is known as "Rasher" because he likes his rasher of bacon, which I gather was not always readily available in the East End of London.

Can you wonder that both my embarrassment and my anger dropped away? This kid in front of me, if I refused his services, would go back to his regiment of rifles.

All I had to do was to bow to custom and in all likelihood this boy in the years to come will be a husband and a father. If I said no, he may lie in one of these cemeteries and a monument such as that at Vimy Ridge will tell future generations of his glorious death.

Yes, poppa can still pull on his own pants. But poppa also, thank God, still has something more than sawdust and steel filings in his heart. I have got a batman and Death has lost "Rasher" Clark.

Hamel, France.—I can mention the name of this village to which I came today because its military importance lies far in the past.

This is the place where "Carey's Chickens"—American engineers and communications men who had not thought to be drawn into combat—stood with their backs to the wall and helped stem a German advance which might have defeated the Allies in 1918.

In a fallow field above the town, a field still strewn with shell fragments after a quarter of a century, I stood with a British captain who is a veteran of that battle. He is a good talker, and as he spoke I saw the gray waves of Germans coming across the field, saw them melt gefore machine gun fire from the trench along the edge of the woods bordering the field, saw another wave come over the bodies of the first.

"We were outnumbered five to one," he told me, "and we received orders to retreat no further. It looked as though we were done for. We scraped up every man we could find behind the lines, including a few hundred Americans under Gen. Carey. They were clerks and cooks and engineers and everything but trained fighting men. But they could fight.

"The Germans sent over six waves and then, just as they seemed to have us, they stopped. I've always had the theory that the Portuguese really won that battle for us. They retreated on their front just then and it is quite possible the Germans decided it would be easier to break through there than through our chaps and Carey's chickens.

"If they had come at us once more they might have got through and the road to Amiens would have been wide open. Capture of that town would have separated the English and French armies."

October 30.

Villers Bretonneux, France.—One of the worst things about war is that the spirit of war is contagious. There have been wars fought for good reason. I believe personally that the English and French are fighting this one in a good cause. But that doesn't in any way mean that war itself, as such, is either good or reasonable.

I am as subject to the contagion of war as anyone else, and so occasionally I find myself arguing that perhaps, after all, it is the natural thing to do this, to enter upon these mass suicide pacts and carry them through to their grim end. I have found that the cure for such contagion is to come to a place like Villers Bretonneux.

In this village is one of the biggest military cemeteries in the world, and the dates on the serried thousands of headstones are the dates of no more than one week. The cemetery is beautifully kept. I walked along the bright clipped turf between the graves and read the last short chapter of many lives.

I was purged of any immediate danger of becoming an advocate of war for war's sake; so I walked down to the road again, pausing only to read a penciled notice on a bulletin board at the gate. It said:

"This British military cemetery is closed and not available for further burials."

Yes, this military cemetery at Villers Bretonneux, and half a hundred others like it in this part of France, are closed to further burials. But there will be others; the surveyors are already at work marking the boundaries of the billets for a new army of the dead.

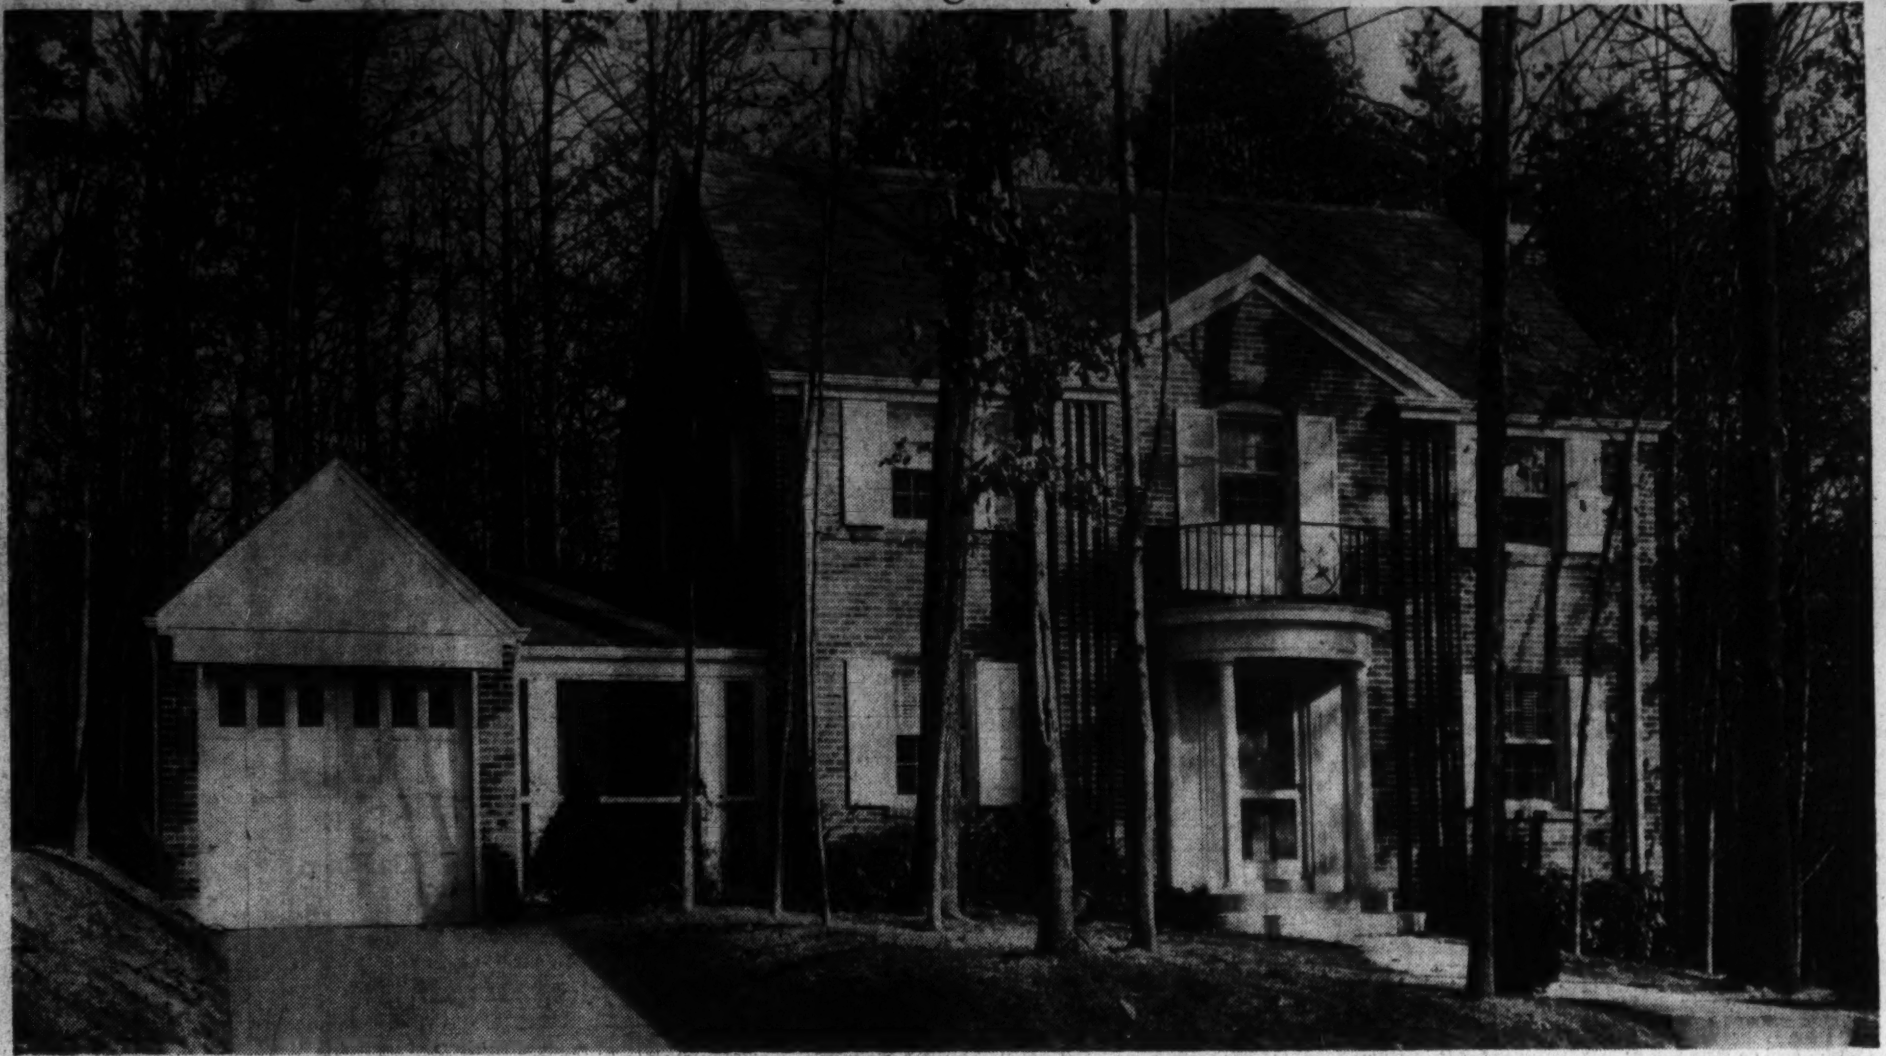
Washington Post Display Home Opening Today in Woodside Forest Community



Featuring Woodside Forest, Md., this Washington Post Display Home at 805 Live Oak drive, is presented by Fulton Gruver, builder and developer of that section, through the office of William M. Throckmorton, sales broker. The exhibit residence is furnished by Hilda N. Miller.

Post Display Home Opened In Maryland

Woodside Forest House Presented in Refined Environment

A new Washington Post Display Home, at 805 Live Oak drive, introduces today Woodside Forest, Md., an ideal, medium-priced, high-grade home community with convenient transportation, stores, schools, churches, refined environment and rustic setting. Distinctive in character and modern in every way, the exhibit house features a development of Fulton Gruver, presented by William M. Throckmorton, sales broker, whose office has handled many high-type subdivisions, and specializes in fine homes.

Of brick construction and detached type, the show residence is of stately Colonial architecture with its traditional center-hall planning. Two and a half stories in height, its site, characteristic of all other home lots in this community, is a broad and tree-shaded one. In the floor arrangement a lavatory, large dining and living rooms, kitchen and den have been assigned to the ground level, with three bedrooms and two baths on the second. An arbored shelter connects the detached garage with the house.

A large attic may be converted to use as an extra guest room, bedroom, playroom, nursery, sewing room, or employed for general utility and storage space. There is also a roomy basement in this spacious dwelling (covered with slate roof and air-conditioned), which accommodates the laundry and air-conditioning units.

The name of Gruver has long been associated with substantial building in the District and its suburbs. "Gruver-built homes" have always been synonymous with high standards of construction, planning and equipment for more than 35 years. Erection of more than 20 homes in this subdivision marks beginning of a schedule that will provide in excess of 250. With a high type of resident, this locality is a restricted and dignified center of medium-priced homes of a price range extending from $12,500 to $12,950.

Woodside Forest has many advantages recommending it to the prospective home purchaser. It may be seen by driving out Georgia avenue to Silver Spring, turning right at Colesville pike to Dale drive, at Mrs. K's Toll House Tavern, then left to the signs announcing the development. Another way is straight through Silver Spring to Columbia boulevard and right.

Location of this community is densely forested with stately oak, elm and maple trees of advanced age. Every one of its attractive homes will be erected on forested sites with frontages of 60 feet or more. Field of the operation lies between Colesville pike and Georgia avenue, each of which arterial highways is served by regular bus transportation. Dale drive, a 60-foot roadway bisects the subdivision, one side of which fronts the beautiful Sligo Valley Park. Characterized by a rural remoteness, Woodside Forest is adjacent to every city convenience.

Within a short distance of the display house is a new elementary school, built as model scholastic institution of Montgomery County, Md. Nearby are the Argyle and Indian Spring Country clubs and the large Silver Spring shopping center. All utilities are installed in this rapidly growing section.

The largest junior high school in the county is near the exhibit residence. A new senior high school has been erected on the edge of the park just a few blocks down Dale drive. There is a parochial school in the vicinity for the training of

Thanksgiving Points Up the Need for Lovely Table Settings

One Keynote To Remember Is Elegance

Metallic Glitter Counts for a Lot On the Festive Board

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

We've heard a lot of back-talk about the Thanksgiving date, and being an easy-going soul, we don't mind personally whether it's one or the other or both—in fact, we expect to get two dinners out of the mix-up.

But on general principles, the day had better get settled permanently on the calendar, or else it's liable to lose much of its importance as the one big all-American holiday. In fact, it first gained its significance when it became a national occasion that we all celebrated together.

For though we're accustomed to regard Thanksgiving as an American idea, it's a festival that goes back to the times of the Hebrews, the home festival in the autumn, can be traced to the days of Egbert the Saxon in the ninth century. But there was no fixed date—it was observed when the harvests were in. In addition special thanksgiving days were named for special occasions. That left so much leeway that the English got to proclaiming Thanksgivings every time they got a chance—for the defeat of the Spanish Armada, for the discovery of Guy Fawkes' gunpowder plot, for the recovery of George III from an attack of insanity.

Since no work could be done on a day of thanksgiving, the idea began to interfere seriously with farming, business and all normal pursuits till Edward VI proclaimed it perfectly lawful to labor on any holiday that came in time of harvest. Even in the time of Cromwell and the Commonwealth there were over a hundred feast days a year. While these feasts when held in the autumn were technically of thanksgiving, they got to be pretty hilarious occasions and the Puritans disapproved sternly. In Holland where they sought refuge before coming to America, the more sober celebrations of the Dutch harvest feast suited them better.

Anyway, the tradition of the autumn feast of thanksgiving was in the blood of those Pilgrims who observed that first Thanksgiving in New England in 1621, which lasted for three days with friendly Indians joining in the celebration. (The idea was congenial to the Indians too who, long before the landing of the Pilgrims, had an autumn feast of their own in which they gave thanks to the Great Spirit for being alive, for sun, moon, springs of water, rain, corn, herbs, forests, game, maple sugar and flowers.)

Other colonies gradually took up the precedent of the Thanksgiving festival, as established by the Pilgrims, until during the Revolution there were eight special Thanksgivings. In 1789 Washington issued a national Thanksgiving proclamation, but this did not become a uniform custom till Lincoln settled on the last Thursday in November. Maybe an earlier Thursday would be better, but we'd better make up our minds and get together if we want our American Thanksgiving to continue to mean what it has for the last 60 odd years. For, despite the fact that the autumn harvest feast in some form has been known in all countries since the beginning of history, the whole world regards Thanksgiving as American simply because we've given it a day and a native menu and a loyal affection.

Well, while the captains and the kings are arguing over the date, a lady with a house can go blithely about her own pleasant business of planning a sumptuous table for this day of gratitude. For it has become the traditional time for the homemaker to take stock and replenish her supplies. After all, this is a day of bounty, a day to celebrate full cupboards and a ready-for-winter abundance. But before adding to your stores of china, linen and silver, it's a good idea to consider the trends of fashion in table settings.

Elegance is one important keynote, with accent on metallic glitter. That means that service plates with lots of gold on them will be in high fashion—that gold encrusted frosted glassware will be very smart—that golden thread embroidery on sheerest mousseline de soie or organdy will be the height of grandeur for table cloths—that silver will be used lavishly while nontarnishable gilt-finished flatware will be frequently seen.

This metallic glitter is not confined to the tables of grandeur, however. Some very simple informal tables stress it too. We saw one trestle-type pine table with pewter plates set on the bare polished wood. Pewter mugs and serving platters and dishes of blue and white scenic ware made a charming table; the centerpiece was an arrangement of bright ears of dried corn and natural gourds.

Between these extremes of elegance and simplicity, however, there is plenty of news. Sheer appliqued table cloths are of first fashion importance — the most beautiful we've seen is in cream-white with a garland of fruit appliqued down the center of the cloth. Lucite place mats with flower designs painted on them are new and novel —they look, of course like plate glass except that they won't break, and one of the most dramatic has a white magnolia painted on it. Another has big lush pink roses as its design. You can get coasters to match. Ecru lace for cloth or mats is always beautiful—so is gleaming linen damask. Rayon damask is very partified and some of the new glass fabrics are interesting for table cloths or mats, as is cellophane in novel weaves.

While the traditional and fine English and French china and earthenware continue to be important in the style picture, there is an increasing trend toward the development of beautiful American china. And from such potteries as Lennox in Trenton we are getting exquisite designs and wonderful qualities of translucent ware. Plain, rather modern patterns are shown where grace of shape is the main lure, and the colors, especially the dusty pinks and powder blues, are lovely. There is a vogue for Danish china and pottery too; this often has a subtlety of color that is appealing and it can be modern yet congenial with traditional things.

Building and Loan Reserves Increase

Reserves in savings and loan associations have increased relative to the share capital in the past several years, according to the report of the Committee on Economic Policies of the United States Building and Loan League. At present the reserve ratio is estimated by the committee at between 7 and 8 per cent of share and deposit liability. This compares with an average of a little more than 4 per cent which prevailed between 1920 and 1930.

"Every year between 1928 and 1936 showed approximately the same proportional gain in reserves," said Russell McKay, Youngstown, Ohio, chairman of the committee. "Our business has apparently achieved a permanently higher reserve level."

Walker Opens New Home Development

Wood Acres, in Massachusetts Avenue, Lives Up to Name

Opening of a new community of moderately priced homes in Massachusetts avenue extended is announced by Albert W. Walker, real estate man and builder. The development, Wood Acres, takes its place with three other Walker subdivisions, Westmoreland Hills, Westhaven and Green Acres. Two demonstration homes will be open starting today, one furnished by the Hecht Co.

Wood Acres occupies a high, wooded tract containing more than 30 acres on the north side of Massachusetts avenue about three miles beyond Westmoreland Circle. Its subdivision plan, approved by FHA, reveals sites that average 60 feet front with depth of 120 feet.

Plans for homes which will be built there are by Schreier & Patterson, A. I. A., who designed homes in the other developments. The objective of this one is to provide homes in the range between Green Acres' average $6,000 and Westhaven's $10,000 upward. Hence, the basic price will be $7,950.

All homes will contain three bedrooms and air conditioning with gas heat. Full basements will be standard. To reach, drive out Massachusetts avenue past Westmoreland Circle (the District Line) to the property.

Home Building Gain Here Put At $15,954,000

Ten-Month Total at $51,663,000, Dodge Office Reports

Washington's metropolitan area is contributing actively to the residential building advance recorded for the 37 States east of the Rocky Mountains. Latest monthly summary prepared by Henry A. Johns, local manager of Dodge Reports, emphasized that a margin of about $16,000,000 has created a most favorable situation this year.

The survey reveals that contracts for work and materials to be used in residential building reached the valuation-level of $51,663,000 during the ten months. The corresponding level at the same point of 1938 was $35,709,000. October contracts sustained the upward movement in the local metropolitan area, being valued at $5,123,000, as against $5,325,000 record for October, 1938.

In an analysis of residential building throughout the 37 States east of the Rocky Mountains, the one and two-family classification had the best gain during October. There was a 13 per cent increase over the number of dwelling units recorded in October of last year. October dollar volume for private residential building exceeded that of all months since April, 1937, the summary concluded.

Traffic Lanes Urged to Ease City Congestion

Method of Routing Cars Through Busy Zones Is Criticized

"We are from habit routing our streetcars and all our other traffic straight through our downtown districts, unnecessarily adding to traffic jam," Thurston H. Ross, director of the bureau of business research of the University of Southern California, pointed out in addressing the National Association of Real Estate Boards at its annual convention at Los Angeles.

"In Los Angeles, for example," he said, "the industrial district is very largely in the eastern and southeastern part of the city. The workers in the industries live, for the most part, in the south and west. To go to their work they must go through the downtown section, at a loss of time and adding unnecessarily to traffic congestion. Through-traffic lanes might quite as well be run three or four blocks away from the principal business area.

"In our effort for safety we have developed so many stop signals, boulevard signals, and the like, that women in particular dislike to drive in the downtown area. If we were to take the streets we have, and use them for carrying traffic instead of for stopping traffic, we could do much to lessen our difficulties, and to conserve the tremendous values in real estate represented in our downtown business properties."

"The traffic problem can be solved but it must be solved on an economic and engineering rather than on a political basis," Mr. Ross said.

Other action which he said may well be taken to conserve present values in central business districts:

Organize for simultaneous rehabilitation of property in central business areas.

Institute research concerning factors affecting downtown business property, to determine the true nature of the problem of conserving our business district values.

Encourage increased municipal, State, and Federal improvements in fringe areas to attract interest in central business districts and to eliminate unsightly or obsolete areas in so far as possible.

Cooperate to secure equitable political treatment in taxation.

He advised central business property owners to improve their own land, not leaving it to the lessee alone to create value within the central business district, and to participate in the economic functioning of their property by writing percentage leases above a substantial minimum. He pointed out that, in reorienting a business district for new usefulness, work must be done to combine small parcels of property to make a usable whole. And he urged individual and community effort to discourage transactions that would be economically undesirable for the district.

Advertising Soul of Trade, Says Sarazan

Hecht Director Discusses Ills Of Selling Science

Following, in part, is a summary of recent address by Bert M. Sarazan, director of publicity and sales promotion, The Hecht Co., before Washington Advertising Club, on the subject "What's Wrong With Advertising?"

Thirty years ago no one would have dared ask the question "What's wrong with advertising" because 30 years ago there was no such thing as an "advertising problem." To be in print was to be in the public eye, and on the public lips, when goods and cash passed over the counter. But the tremendous growth and development of both media and technical skill have brought about a revolution in marketing and selling . . . so that we have been forced to adopt a new state of mind toward the science of advertising.

There are many critics of this new attitude. There are many who say "advertising can never be a science. There are too many intangibles." You can find the answer to that in Carol Rheinstrom's Case Book, in which he points out that medicine also dealt with intangibles before science superseded superstition. And he says there are certain elements not yet identified . . . vast factual realms of which we are not even aware . . . but would a similar indictment make astronomy any less a science? I think not . . . and I contend that by treating advertising as a science we are not assuming any unwarranted condition of control . . . we are merely adopting a state of mind . . . as a means of influencing human behavior for purposes of trade.

Has No Pet Theories

Now, I have no pet theories to offer . . . no rules to declaim. I hold merely that advertising is intrinsically an active force in business . . . and that every advertisement is created to produce some definite result. I hold further that results achieved are the only true measures of advertising effectiveness.

Some years ago at a sales meeting, a portly and opinionated executive shook his finger at the advertising counselor and shouted: "Who pays for all this advertising? Who pays the bill?" And the reply was: "The public pays for advertising. And it may interest you to know that the public pays your salary, and every other cost of sales and operation. But if by your question you mean to ask 'does merchandise cost more money because it's advertised,' my answer to you is this: advertising is the least expensive method of marketing a good product in volume." Whether advertising ultimately saves money for consumers as a whole is not my point. That happens to be a highly involved and much debated question. I can, however, think of some fairly impressive and convincing arguments. We have only to look back over the record. Your $1,500 automobile of 1910 is a better one today for $600. Mr. Eastman's $8.00 Kodak is a better one today for 98 cents. Your 25-cent can of tomato soup is a better one today for a dime. And your $25.00 automobile tire of the good-old-days ran 2,500 miles, if you were lucky. Today it costs $12.00, and frequently gives you 25,000 miles of service.

Life Transformed

Advertising has done more than its share to transform American life. It got rid of the country store and brought us the modern market with food in sanitary packages. It relieved the housewife of drudgery by the introduction of countless labor-saving devices. And it taught each of us that even an ordinary workingman might aspire to owning a high speed automobile. And so the face of an entire continent was changed . . . by the building of billions of dollars worth of fine highways . . . and today more than half of all our families enjoy individual transportation.

Advertising had a big hand in this . . . and within the memory of men not yet 40, helped to create a revolution in better living such as the world had not seen before in centuries. Your president asked me to say a word indicating the retail attitude toward advertising. Advertising has become an integral part of the retail selling job . . . just as retail store news has become an indispensable part of a good newspaper. And I think the story points another fundamental truth: the amazing progress that has been made in the newspaper field, in the self-regulation and standardization of space rates, and the splendid controls that have voluntarily been set up in the marketing of lineage. The progress of advertising closely parallels the progress of newsprint publishing, and the two interests so closely allied in everyday work, have contributed an incalculable good to America and American business.

And while we're on the subject of newspapers, I'd like to interpolate another thought. We hear a lot of conversation from newspaper men, from merchants, from space buyers and advertisers about the old-fashioned bogey known as "duplicate circulation." This paper is supposed to duplicate that paper . . . and number three paper overlaps number four paper . . . and so on. As far as I'm concerned, this is just plain baloney. I think any advertiser can handsomely afford to pay extra for anybody who'll read his advertising twice. It's the people who don't read your advertising at all, that waste your money. And that's not the newspaper's fault . . . that's yours . . . and mine.

What's wrong with advertising? Not very much . . . most of the trouble is with the advertiser himself. One of the most amazing tributes to advertising as a business force is the fact that during the past 30 or 40 years, most of our advertising has been prepared and written by people who make not the slightest prePtense of knowing his sales message is supposed to operate in or on the mental process of the reader. In other words, hundreds of millions of dollars worth of copy has been published on a basis as unsound and unscientific as a medical diagnosis that might be made without the slightest knowledge of physiology or practical therapeutics. Zangwill once said every king should have a novelist in his cabinet, to tell him how people feel. Ten years from today every great business will have near its head a practical psychologist, or a student of publicity, to tell him how people act . . . and re-act to his advertising.

Fight Against Inertia

Academically, the success of your advertising depends on your ability to take out of your mind an intangible idea and deliver it into other men's minds so clearly and vigorously as to bring about definite physical action. And remember, this must be done against an astonishing normal inertia that lets people suffer with a toothache rather than go to a dentist; against a strong normal aversion to parting with even small sums of money; against a universal impulse to resist anything that's new or different.

Just how profitably any advertiser can produce this action depends on three other things: the extent to which he can arouse emotion; the extent to which he can upset habit; the extent to which he can stimulate rationalization.

You may not realize it, but the man who reads your advertising is appallingly and astoundingly uninterested in both you . . . and your advertising technique. And on top of that, his memory is distressingly bad. He remembers only about one-tenth of what he hears . . . and about three-tenths of what he sees . . . and only about five-tenths of what he both hears and sees. I'm not an authority on this subject, but the experts will tell you that 90 per cent of all ordinary learning is forgotten in 24 hours . . . and that only by overlearning, by considerable special effort, is man's mind able to retain anything. They even claim that man's memory is 25 per cent false as to facts, and that one-fourth of all testimony given under oath is unconscious perjury. And perhaps that's why feeble, puny discontinuous advertising is both expensive and dangerous . . . and very unproductive. You just didn't hit hard enough to send it home. You just didn't get it across.

What's wrong with advertising? Diffusion! Personally, I hate diffusion in advertising. Retail copy today, more than ever before, must be specific, forceful, direct and practical. We must present the things that people want and need, in such a fashion as to persuade customers that they ought to buy them. We should soft pedal economy, or customers may take us seriously. The best way to economize is to do without. The best way to save is not to spend. Let somebody else preach the virtues of thrift, frugality and economy. Our job is to stimulate desire. To make people want things.

What's wrong with advertising? Imagination, ingenuity, originality, motive power . . . ideas! Just why we find new ideas so difficult to create and develop I can't tell you, unless it's because we're not old enough yet to have gotten away from our internal reflexes of being afraid of everything that's different. Actually we ought to change our basic unit . . . and instead of asking yourselves "how many pages did we buy?" We should ask ourselves "how many ideas did we get across?" Obviously one idea put across is worth more than 5,000 pages of space that didn't get anything across at all.

What's wrong with advertising? Verbosity, long-windedness! As a good salesman, the advertiser must understand the value of brevity because it is the soul of salesmanship, and advertising demands a highly condensed literary style. If you travel along any important highway at 40 miles an hour in an automobile you can't read one-tenth of the copy that teh billboard boys have written for you. If you don't believe it, try it some time, and it will give you a good idea of about the length of time you should allow for your advertising message to penetrate, anywhere. In other words, your ad is either good or bad to the fellow who looks at it in about 40 seconds, and if you haven't captured his interest by that time, it isn't worth anything from then on. What you are after is the unstudied reaction of a group of people, and your ad isn't worth a nickel the minute you have to argue about it or explain it.

Of course, there are two kinds of advertising. One is for today alone. The other is for next and all years to come . . . No building ever erected is more important than the building of goodwill . . . A merchant's greatest asset is not in his bricks and mortar, the goods on the shelves, or the money in the bank. His greatest asset is his name. The firm of Tiffany couldn't afford to sell you an imitation diamond even if they were foolish enough to do so, which they are not. Go out to Detroit and offer Henry Ford a million dollars for the use of the four letters that spell his name, and he'd laugh at you . . . but you could take the same cars and put the name "Jones" on them, instead of Ford and you couldn't sell them.

Go out to Chicago and tear down the stores of Marshall Field, wholesale and retail . . . burn the goods on the shelves . . . take the money in the bank and scatter it to the four winds. That would not destroy Marshall Field, if you leave the name. Tomorrow morning with buildings, merchandise and money all gone that name would still be cheap at a hundred million dollars.

Such are the values built by busintss integrity, business intelligence, and good advertising.

F. L. Ackerman Answers Critic Of Architects

Calls Profession an Early 'Skirmisher' For Low-Cost Homes

Architecture was first of the professions to send its "skirmishers" well out front in the battle for low-cost housing, Frederick L. Ackerman, of New York, fellow of the American Institute of Architects, reminds in The Octagon, publication of the Institute, in reply to criticisms of architectural service for public housing projects by A. C. Shire, technical director of the United States Housing Authority.

"Mr. Shire makes no reference at all to a very considerable amount of work of a serious technical nature which was done by members of the architectural profession in the interest of a matter-of-fact restatement of the problem of housing, and also in the working out of such half-way solutions as it might be possible to find within the framework of our debt economy," Mr. Ackerman says, in part.

"As I run over the list of those who volunteered to act as pioneers in this field, seeking rational solutions within the frame of aims expressed by Mr. Shire, the small list seems to be made up almost exclusively of architects; engineers were conspicuous by their absence. There was no compensation to be derived from this pioneering work, which was confined largely to finding 'solutions' within the technical fields of design and construction, since they could not be applied under the reign of 'business-as-usual.'"

Recalls the 1920's

"But what impels me to find fault with Mr. Shire's statement is the absence of any reference to a genetic account of housing in the United States and to the causal circumstance which gave rise to the recent drift toward a more matter-of-fact technique of design. From his statement one gains the impression that the architect has played no part at all in this work; this is not so.

"The fact is, and can be abundantly documented, that the profession of architecture had sent its skirmishers well out front, far beyond the line of business-as-usual.

"Mr. Shire singles out as conspicuous examples of misguided men 'the 1920 style architect.' But it should be recalled that it was during the 1920's that a considerable number of architects, grown inexpressibly weary of working under the canons of conspicuous waste and competitive spending, took up the rather thankless task of attempting to restate the problem of housing in terms of a matter-of-fact approach.

"Naturally, there are few examples of accomplishment during that period, for the 1920's offered practically no opportunities of translating rational aims into rational structures. That was the period during which 'Financial Business' rated it safer, more conservative, to loan a few billions to foreign nations for launching of housing schemes and preparations for war than to risk a few dollars in the United States in the interest of more and better housing.

"The reason why we are now resorting to subsidized housing to take care of how large a proportion of our total population nobody knows is that no one group is prepared to deal with this problem of housing for all of us. Mr. Shire's troubles with designs for low-cost housing are not due merely to deficiencies in 'local' individuals; they arise in a broad institutional background. The fact that we are discussing this matter in this way is probably due to our deep sense of frustration."

Questions Policies

Designing for low cost and low rents is certainly and emphatically unlike the experience of the architect prior to the years of the depression, Mr. Ackerman continues, asking, "how else could it be?"

"Has Mr. Shire forgotten what actuated building during the several decades prior to 1930? Has he forgotten Veblen's 'Theory of the Leisure Class' with its discussions of the pecuniary canons of taste, conspicuous waste, competitive consumption, etc.?" Mr. Ackerman questions what there was in the preparation of drawings under the injunctions to design cheaply, asking what was there in all this experience which would prepare one to design for minimum cost-of-use over a 60-year amortization period? The answer is, there was nothing, in his opinion.

"And what was there in working under the criteria of conspicuous waste and competitive spending in designing structures for institutions of higher learning, for great banks, for religious institutions, for the would-be and the ultra-well-to-do, and so on and on—what was there in all this experience to prepare him for the advent of subsidized housing for the very poor—again there was nothing.

"The wonder is that the profession kept a tiny flame of interest in workmanship and well-building going all through this period, and more the wonder that revolt against this period of misguided effort showed its head before the Great Depression set in.

"And just what had engineering to offer at this same juncture? This is what it had to offer: it accepted the whole complicated muddle of the construction industry, considered as a whole, as the point of departure in its quest for efficiency in providing habitations for all of us. It accepted the inordinately wasteful system of distribution and assumed that it was solving some problem by saving some picayune items in a living unit while the torrent of waste in the production industry as a whole went roaring by. What was there in the experience and training in the field of the construction industry which competently to deal with this problem prepared the construction engineer lem of adequate housing for all of us? Again, one may say, nothing much."

Great System of Highways Helps Arlington County Growth

Area Is Well Within Driving Distance of D.C.

Schools, Churches And Clubs Readily Acccessible to Residents

A great system of wide, well-planned and constructed roadways and boulevards has been accomplished for Arlington County. These arterial highways and their branches make the many attractive home developments built in this territory easily accessible to neighboring shopping centers, recreation areas, schools, clubs and churches, and within a short driving distance from the downtown business section of Washington. Among the best known of these traffic channels is Wilson boulevard.

In the old days Wilson boulevard (probably called by another name) was the road to the ferry at Georgetown. Today it is one of the roads which lead to the bridge. Every major road in the county leads to one or another of the several bridges over the Potomac at Washington. Where this old road crosses the Leesburg pike (and becomes Sleepy Hollow road) one may see what is left of a dirt fortification of the War Between the States. It is called Fort Buffalo and is one of the points of interest pointed out to visitors.

Crossing the Wilson boulevard at this point is the newly-constructed Lee boulevard which cuts across the county to the new bridge across the Potomac at the Lincoln Memorial. The right of way of this super-highway is 200 feet wide and has long stretches of straightaway.

From this point the tour goes through Falls Church and East Falls Church. The former is an incorporated town and is in Fairfax County; the latter (formerly a part of Falls Church) is not incorporated and is in Arlington County. Both of these communities have been in existence for more than half a century.

There is also a West Falls Church which is near the Arlington County line and only a short distance from a small section of woods in which may be found the stone which marks the southwestern corner of the original District of Columbia. From that stone Arlington County spreads like a fan.

From here the tour leads back to the center of Arlington over the Washington boulevard, a comparatively new highway which, until five years ago, was just a country road running alongside abandoned farm land and patches of woods. Today it is a main thoroughfare linking numerous progressive residential subdivisions. From East Falls Church to Clarendon is about four miles, and in making that short journey one passes through the following new communities: Pinehurst, Overlee Knolls, Highland Park, Larchmont, Forest Park, Clarenford, Waycroft.

The same situation is happening along Glebe road. In driving to the Potomac River at Chain Bridge the way leads through Country Club Hills, Golf Club Manor, Country Club Grove, Fort Ethan Allen and many other communities. Many of the houses are larger than those along the Washington boulevard. Indeed, if they were surrounded by more extensive grounds, some of them could be called country estates.

Returning to East Falls Church from Chain Bridge, one takes the Little Falls road. This is one of the oldest roads in northern Virginia and was known to George Washington and his associates, and probably to others before the First President was born. It was the road by which the settlers hauled tobacco to the warehouse at Little Falls, the head of navigation on the Potomac. On their way to the falls, travelers passed a Colonial church, which became known as the Falls Church. The church later gave its name to the town which grew up around it.

Touring back to Clarendon along the Lee highway, one comes to Lyon Village. This community is only a few years old but is well built up and one of the fine residential sections of the county. Passing through Lyon Village the next point of interest is one of the show places of the county—at least, as far as new and novel home construction is concerned. It is called Colonial Village and consists of more than 1,000 apartments under the same management. This community is served by a large telephone switchboard and has a branch postoffice, a community center and shopping district, playgrounds and many other conveniences.

Driving through the business community of Rosslyn and south of Arlington Ridge road toward Alexandria, the area served by the Ivy-Jackson telephone office is next visited. Here, as in almost every other section of the county, new building is continually going on. Large houses, small houses, all kinds and varieties of houses.

At Fort Meyer, in Arlington, are developed horsemen whch are the pride of the Army. They compare with Arabs, Cossacks, cowboys and circus riders. Detachments from this post are detailed as escort to distinguished visitors to the Nation's Capital, and horsemen from the post may be seen in many of the important parades held in Washington, especially in the inaugural processions.

The picturesque Mount Vernon Memorial highway runs from the Virginia end of the new Memorial Bridge, near the new entrance to Arlington Cemetery from Washington. It was built by the United States Government and completed in 1932 and is popular with visitors to the Nation's Capital, as it overlooks the Potomac all the way to Mount Vernon.

Oakcrest Home Attracts Many

The Virginia Model Home in Oakcrest, Arlington's new low-cost semidetached home development being offered by J. Lee Price, attracted the interest of scores of Washingtonians when it opened last Sunday.

Of special interest to visitors were many features of the home which are not usually found in projects in its price group. Spaciousness of the home, its two large screened porches, sturdy, basic construction and the beautiful setting in which it has been placed attracted considerable attention.

Oakcrest is situated in a wooded section a ten-minute drive from downtown Washington. It is reached by crossing Memorial Bridge, driving out Arlington Ridge road to South Glebe road and left.

Home Is Offered Near Country Club

Homes near country clubs are in demand because they are close to recreational and social opportunities of club life. One house so fortunately situated is near Washington Golf and Country Club. It is one of three beautifully designed homes and contains two spacious bedrooms, black and white tiled bath, large living room with fireplace, dining room with built-in china cabinet, modern kitchen, oil air-conditioned heat, concrete side porch, ample closet space and area in the basement for a recreation room.

In a one-fare bus zone and convenient to schools and stores, it is at 4822 North Twenty-fifth road, in Lee Heights, Va. Presented by the Virginia office of J. Wesley Buchanan, this home may be viewed by going out Lee highway to Glebe road, right to North Twenty-fifth street, two blocks to Columbus street, right to North Twenty-fifth road, and right.

Water Knock Muffled

A general silencer for eliminating the hammer of water is being offered home owners. Its manufacturers claim that it eliminates hammer in hot and cold water lines, its acting element being a flexible diaphragm supported by a metal-spring backing.

Alexandria Area Blends Mellow Past With Brisk Modernity

Home Buyers Find Locality Is Appealing

Beauty, Early History Lend Enchantment To Environs

Alexandria and the numerous attractive residential developments in the environs of this historic city close to Washington are almost daily being regarded by an increasing number of home buyers as ideal places in which to live. Out of a background antedating the birth of the Republic, this locality has grown into a charming and populous metropolitan area in which a brisk modernity blends with the mellow beauty of the past.

The story of this territory began in 1679, when Robert Howsing received a crown grant of 6,000 acres on the Potomac River. The following year he conveyed the land to John Alexander, and about 1731, Scotch merchants removing from the settlement at Dumfries, Va., bult a warehouse and named the village Belhaven. With a steady growth it was deemed wise to incorporate as a town and on July 13, 1749, the charter for the Town of Alexandria was effective. It's early history is closely linked with colonial Virginia and the beginning of the United States. The shrines there bring to memory the names of many whose deeds are written indelibly on the pages of national history.

From 1791 to 1846 Alexandria was a part of the original District of Columbia and was known as the County of Alexandria, D. C. By an act of retrocession of the National Congress, July 9, 1846, Alexandria was receded to Virginia as a free city, independent of any county affiliations. It is one of three cities in the United States having this unique situation, and the only one that was made so by an act of Congress.

Convenient Location

Alexandria, on the popular North-South concrete highway, U. S. Route No. 1, is only a day's drive from New York, Rochester and Buffalo in New York State; Pittsburgh, Pa.; Raleigh, N. C., and White Sulphur Springs, W. Va. In Alexandria the tourist can get the service and hotel accommodations of a larger city at lower cost, according to the Chamber of Commerce, which suggests to tourists, "When planning your itinerary, make Alexandria your headquarters." It is situated only 6 miles from Washington; 21 miles from battlefields of first and second Manassas; 1½ hours from Wilderness, Chancellorsville and Fredericksburg battles, and is within the same driving time from the beautiful Shenandoah Valley of Virginia and the Skyline Drive.

The visitor to the city is at once attracted by the colonial architecture of the old dwellings, and names are linked with these old homes. When one crosses the threshold, a wealth of memories pass in review—the colonial belle in her quaint dress dancing the minuet and the stately and majestic figure of Washington, with his wife, Martha, gracing many such gatherings. Leaders of political thought, seeking the counsel of the great Washington, came there and visited many of the old homes which still stand today and are open to the public once each year. To enumerate them all would be difficult, but a few of the more important ones are: The home of "Light Horse" Harry Lee, Revolutionary hero, and father of the illustrious Robert Edward Lee, built in 1776; that of Gen. William Brown, physician-general and director of army hospitals in the Continental Army. Erected in 1776 and well preserved, it is in use today as a private dwelling.

There is the boyhood home of Robert E. Lee, where he lived while preparing for West Point. This building was completed in 1807. The Smoot home housed Gen. Lafayette while he was a visitor to the city in 1825. The Ramsay house, built in 1748, and oldest in Alexandria. Dennis Ramsay, a compatriot of Washington and mayor of Alexandria, 1789-1790, lived there.

In Colonial Virginia, the Church of England was the predominant body and Washington was an adherent. In 1767 the building of Christ Church was started and completed in 1773. Washington held a pew and was a regular attendant after the Revolution. He lived in Truro Parish and also attended Pohick Church, 14 miles south of Alexandria. Both edifices are still used for divine worship. Robert E. Lee was confirmed in Christ Church and attended services while living at Arlington.

In addition there is the Old Presbyterian Meeting House, erected in 1775. The quaint churchyard adjoining holds the remains of many of Washington's closest friends, also the tomb of the Unknown Revolutionary Soldier. In the meeting house is found the oldest pipe organ in America. Other old churches are: St. Paul's, 1817, St. Mary's, 1826, First Baptist, 1830, and Southern Methodist, 1830.

Alexandria Academy was erected in 1785. In this building as an adjunct to the academy, was established the first free school in northern Virginia. Washington contributed $250 annually and on his death bequeathed $4,000 as a trust fund to support this institution. The original building is now standing and is open to the public. Robert E. Lee was a student and graduated from the academy in 1824.

The Carlyle House, erected in 1752, is one of the very historic shrines. It was the home of John Carlyle, commissary general in the Continental Army and one of the founders of Alexandria. In 1755 Washington met Gen. Braddock in the building which was the general's headquarters while he was preparing for the ill-fated expedition to Fort Duquesne which resulted in his death three months later. While Gen. Braddock was in Alexandria a conference of five royal governors was held. They recommended that a tax be levied on the Colonies to defray expenses of the French and Indian War. The imposition of the tax served to arouse the Colonies and led to the Revolution 20 years later.

Alexandria early organized a fire department and "Friendship Engine Co." was formed. Washington became a member and attended the meetings when in town. While in Philadelphia attending the Continental Congress, 1774, he purchased a hand pumper which he presented to this company. It was brought to Alexandria by ox team.

In the Masonic Temple on Cameron street, are the relics so intimately linked with Washington; the chair he used as master of the lodge, the old bed chamber clock, silent witness to his death; the hands pointing to the hour that marked the passing of the first President. In addition the following relics may also be seen: Charter of Alexandria-Washington Lodge No. 22, containing the name of Washington as master; altar, pedestals and desks of secretary and treasurer, all original furniture. There are 17 fan-back chairs that are original; settees and straight-back chairs were made in 1802. The original Bible, published in 1763, rests on the altar. A resolution of the Grand Lodge of Virginia dated December 17, 1805, changing the name to Alexandria-Washington; Williams' picture of Washington painted from life in 1794, for which there is a standing offer of $100,000; the silver trowel, used by Washington in laying the cornerstone of the National Capitol, September 18, 1793; also the original plumb, square and level used on the same occasion.

Gadsby's Tavern and the City Hotel hold a place of historical value. Here was held the first conference that eventually led to the Constitutional Convention at Philadelphia in 1787. On March 22, 1785, representatives of Maryland met with three from Virginia. Among the Virginians were George Washington and George Mason. They gathered to discuss boundary lines but laid plans for the meeting in Annapolis the following year, and from this meeting the convention at Philadelphia was made possible.

Washington's last public appearance was on the steps of the Tavern, when, in November, 1779, he reviewed the Alexandria militia and gave his last military command. In one of the rooms John Paul Jones and Baron De Kalb met for the first time. Washington made Gadsby's his headquarters in recruiting his first command for the Great Meadows campaign in 1754. The first celebration of the adoption of the Federal Constitution took place, June 28, 1788.

6 New Homes In Woodlawn Are Opened

More Than 125 Have Been Sold in Model Arlington Area

Six new homes of a group of 16 are being opened today in Woodlawn Village, one of Arlington's best-known moderate-cost residential communities, by B. M. Smith, exclusive agents. Already more that 125 homes have been sold in the section, which is a model community of lovely new small houses, beautiful lawns and wide, paved streets. It is conveniently accessible to Washington by several through routes, and is situated in an elevated location.

New homes being offered vary in architectural types and embody many fine features not ordinarily found in moderate-cost dwellings. Cape Cod influence dominates the group, which was planned to meet the growing demand for five-room, one-floor homes. Stone and brick are used to lend variety to the appearance of the group.

Among features are spacious rooms, fireplaces, attractive rooms with paneled walls, fully-equipped modern kitchens, oil burners with hot water heat, tile baths full basements, and floored attics which provide space for additional rooms.

The model home at 4909 North Sixteenth street, has been attractively furnished by Hutchinson's, Inc., and may be reached by driving over Key Bridge, out Lee highway to Glebe road, left to Seventeenth street and Woodlawn Village. The property may also be reached over Memorial Bridge and out Lee boulevard to Glebe road, then right.

Kitchen Modernizer

New all-steel kitchen cabinets, designed to give accent on flexibility in service, are being used for installation in new homes and to modernize the kitchens of older homes.

Inadequate Water Is Unsatisfactory

A water system which lacks adequate capacity for the needs of the home offers no satisfaction. A single faucet needs from 2 to 3½ gallons of water a minute for a good full flow.

Some home owners, confusing price with economy, have mistakenly bought water systems with capacity barely sufficient to supply one faucet at a time. These appear all right until two or more persons try to draw water simultaneously from different faucets, when the flow rapidly sinks to an aggravating dribble because of insufficient reserve capacity.

There is long-range economy in installing a water system of the style and size suited to both present and future needs, one providing a full flow of water any time a faucet is opened in kitchen, bathroom, or laundry, at outside hose taps for sprinkling and fire protection in barnyard, stables, or other outbuildings.

The Post Surveys Homes for Moderate Income Bracket

Many Renters May Now Buy Own Homes

Variety of Types And Locations to Meet Every Need

Realizing the great market for the modest-cost home, builders in the Washington metropolitan area have prepared for this field so well that the small wage earner is in a better position today to own his own house than ever before in the history of the National Capital.

A detailed survey of what is offered locally in the low-priced field from the standpoints of selection, financing, equipment, location, ownership advantage and the value of a home as an estate, is presented in ensuing pages of this section of The Washington Post.

A canvass of this city and its suburban districts reveals an enormous group of fine dwellings in the lower cost ranges that can be purchased by the man of small average income, and which can be acquired by him as his own home.

All that is required is the necessary down payment which, according to Federal Housing Administration figures, is 10 per cent for a house in the moderate cost range such as is being widely featured in the National Capital and its environs today. Then comes a modest monthly cost for interest, taxes etc., and paying off the mortgage after the down payment has been made.

The present home-building and equipment program has advanced to such a marked degree beyond that of ten years ago that a great deal more value can be expected in today's house selling at moderate cost, and which is the product of experienced builders or has won approvel of the official agency.

First the buyer expects and gets a well-built dwelling. A composite specification of the average house reveals that he obtains masonry walls and a good roof on a sound foundation. The house generally contains two or three bedrooms and one bath, usually with tiled walls, a living room, dining room and an electric or gas-equipped kitchen.

Hardwood floors are another improvement. Most houses have rock wool or other types of insulation against heat or cold. Dwellings in this classification also include automatic heating systems. Of course, it is important for the buyer to remember that while two houses may each sell at the same reasonable price, one in one location may be costlier than one in another as far as monthly payments are concerned.

This is sometimes caused by the difference in the tax rate, the higher the tax rate meaning, the more a buyer must pay. This is another reason why prospective home-buyers should take more interest in legislative matters that may mean a raising of the tax rate and a subsequent increase in tax payments.

But never has the construction industry presented such bargains to the small-salaried family head as today. Small homes are better built and sell for less, and Federal Housing Administration authorities have referred to the lower mortgage valuations of finer constructed dwellings.

In fact, reversing a trend characteristic of other periods of great home building activity, the building crafts have devised techniques which permit progressive lowering of small-home prices without sacrificing desirable standards of planning and construction. One of the major reasons for the increase in the volume of home construction is the steady advance made by the construction industry in the production of good small homes, priced to sell to families of moderate and low means.

In past years the building trades too often concentrated on houses priced to sell to the small group of families receiving high incomes. By overbuilding for this group and failing to supply an adequate number of smaller units, builders sometimes glutted the market with unsalable properties.

An additional factor contributing to the stability of the present home building field is the improvements in the standards of design and construction being employed by the industry. Sound products to be sold at reasonable profit have had a marked effect upon the volume of sales. Assured that the houses offered for sale are sound in plan and located in neighborhoods which will withstand blight, more people have been willing to undertake purchase of homes.

Carroll Knolls' Homes Exhibited

Among numerous communities in the Silver Spring area of close-in Maryland is Carroll Knolls, now featured by exhibit residences on Homestead drive, ranging in price from $6,950 upwards and purchasable with Federal Housing Administration financing, if desired.

Homes are of the full two-story type, fine architecture, sound construction, center-entrance plan and generous room sizes. Presented by Frank J. Volkman, they may be seen by driving out Georgia avenue northwest and Brookville pike, 1⅞ miles past the traffic light in Silver Spring, and turning left two blocks to the development sign.

Screen Door Grilles Decorative, Protecting

The possibilities of decorative effects of ornamental grilles used in connection with screen doors are frequentlv overlooked by home owners.

In front doors having leaded glass side lights, a grille simulating a leaded effect in the screen door would carry out the general character of the entrance. Aside from their ornamental qualities, the grilles also serve to protect and strengthen the screening.

Larger Glass Areas Liven Up a Building

Many home owners, in modernizing their houses, are making provisions for larger glass areas which bring life to a dull or slightly outmoded building.

The free entry of sunlight and air into the home, from attic to the basement, is being accomplished in many homes through the increasing use of corner windows, glassed-in dining alcoves, French doors, and even room-length walls of glass.

With 60 homes now under construction for recent buyers, total number of homes built and underway in Woodmoor, Md., exceeds 150, it is announced by George J. Moss, president of Moss Realty Co., realtors and developers of the subdivision.

Of these, more than 100 are in the "small estates section," started six months ago. This part of Woodmoor is devoted to low-cost two and three-bedroom homes of the type approved by FHA for 25-year, 90 per cent, fully amortized mortgages.

Thirty more will be started within the next month. All are contracted for by buyers who select lots after veiwing three sample houses. Designed by Schreier & Patterson, A. I. A., homes are of detached, Colonial type, on minimum 70-foot lots. All are airconditioned, with gas or oil heating plants. Full basements provide for recreation rooms. Three basic plans are followed. The bungalow type has two bedrooms and bath on first floor, a living room, dining room and kitchen. A finished stairway leads to an attic area large enough for future conversion into additional bedrooms. Two other plans are for two and three-bedroom, two-story types.

The development is served by a shopping center, erected by the company at Colesville and old Bladensburg roads—Four Corners.

Bolling Heights Offers Rural Quiet With City Conveniences

Secluded Development Is Free of Traffic Peril

Average Payment for Homes in Area Is $35 a Month; Play Zones Are Provided, With Automobiles Barred

A way to joyous living is presented in Bolling Heights where less than $35 a month buys a home. In this suburban community with metropolitan conveniences, 21 of a projected more than 200 houses are already completed. The home the buyer has dreamed of so long is there for him in this development which although in the District of Columbia, is a distinctly individual and independently planned subdivision.

[illegible] neighborhood apart from the noise, smoke [illegible] of the city, yet close enough to all its conveniences. Cool, fresh breezes blow in from the Potomac River, during the summer providing clean, exhilarating surroundings throughout the entire year and resulting in one thing the house seeker has desired to make home life truly enjoyable and complete.

Children are protected there from traffic hazards. Provision is made for play areas off the streets and in the rear of the home groupings. There they may be free to play, safe from the perils of automobiles. Home buyers in Bolling Heights need not worry about their children's safety. There is ample park and playground space to care for their games. Away from dangerous traffic, they are completely protected and happy.

Schools Are Handy

For their education, elementary schools are located but a few blocks away from the development. Anacostia High School is only a short walk from it. The project is on the hills overlooking Bolling Field and the Potomac River. It is entirely wooded and bounded on three sides by Government reservations. Every few minutes, the Congress Heights bus line practically passes the doors of all the residents. They can reach the downtown section of the District within a few minutes. A complete shopping center is nearby.

Numerous homes are ready for occupancy and more will be completed as these are sold. Of interest to buyers in the development is the fact that special tracts which have been planned as play areas, have been arranged in conformity with the general plan of the enterprise which has been approved by the Federal Housing Administration and adheres to the best principles of community development. Houses will range in price from $4,990 to $5,450. All streets, sidewalks and alleys will be paved.

Directors of the project announce that it will be limited to 300 houses and advise that as these will be sold rapidly, buyers should make prompt selections. The homes are artistically designed. In fact, there is a great deal more to them than one can see from the outside. The attractive exteriors give but a slight hint of the many modern features, their extreme values and quality construction.

Homes are 18 by 27 feet over all, in dimensions, a great deal of house considering the moderate cost. Planners of the development remind that there are few places in the city where shoppers can acquire houses as large as these at anywhere near the price. The rooms are large and one bedroom can even be divided into two, if desired.

Three group homes in Bolling Heights, new moderate-cost residential project in southeast Washington, built and presented by Bolling Heights, Inc., developers. Bolling Heights Exhibit Home Is on View

Eighteenth Century Furniture Placed In Living Room

Bolling Heights is now featured by an exhibit home in the 400 block of Oakland street southeast, furnished by Hilda N. Miller, interior decorator. The living room of this house is decorated with eighteenth century furniture. Predominating colors are rose, blue, gold and plum. The sofa, covered in blue boucle, adds personality to the room, being of colonial type with Lawson influence.

A barrel chair which helps give height to the furniture has a covering of beautiful gold damask. The lounge chair is covered in a warm plum fabric with loose pillow back.

Near the lounge chair a Chippendale bookcase contains colorful volumes which add an air of distinction. The walls are papered in a neutral color which gives spaciousness to the room.

The dining room is furnished with Sheraton furniture. Predominating colors are rose and blue. The rose taupe rug blends nicely with the neutral wall paper.

The master bedroom has been papered in a soft peach with a touch of eggshell hue. The furniture is colonial mahogany with Sheraton influence and the curtains are soft, dotted marquisette in eggshell color. The rug is a hooked design of room size.

The second bedroom is papered in a soft shade of blue. The furniture is early American maple design and rugs are of a hooked pattern.

Low Interest Financing Makes Home Ownership Easier

Banks, Loan Institutions, FHA All Aid

Amortized Loans Solve Problems of Average Family

Home buying has been simplified to make home owning easier. The United States Government, the large banking and building and loan organizations realize the worth of the home owner and have seen the wisdom of assisting him in his commendable effort. Special Federal agencies have been set up to facilitate home acquisition. The Federal Housing Administration and Home Owners Loan Corporation have rendered invaluable assistance to the worthy movement.

Today the gap between the wish to own a home and the fact of owning has been filled by simplified purchasing processes and financing methods. The route to home ownership has been cleared of difficulties once blockading it. Financing a home transaction until recent years often presented an involved and tedious operation. It baffled numerous hopeful seekers in the market and ofttimes dampened their initial enthusiasm. It seemed to amass obstacles in their quest.

Obstacles Removed

Now all this has been rectified. Clumsy financial arrangements no longer impede. From practically every means of financing a buyer wishes to make use of, aggravating details have been eliminated. Whether the modest-salaried home seeker buys under an insured loan of the Federal Housing Administration, through his banking institution, savings, building and loan association, mortgage company or other medium, he will be pleasantly surprised to discover that home buying arrangements have been made liberal and understandable. The down payment is often less than the cost of an automobile and monthly payments are lower than rent in a great many instances. The latter is arranged to include group insurance, principal and interest. They are planned so that by 20 or 25 years, or less, if the purchaser so desires, the home is his, clear of all encumbrances

Examples Given

For example, under the Federal Housing Administration's plan, the purchaser of a home property valued by the FHA and priced by the seller at $4,500, and on which the mortgage is $4,050, pays $450 down and through a period of 25 years pays an average of $23.53 a month, this monthly payment taking care of principal, interest and mortgage insurance.

Again, the man who buys a $6,000 home, on which the mortgage is $5,400, pays $600 down and his monthly payment will average $31.37 for a period of 25 years. The buyer of a $7,000 home, on which the mortgage will be $6,360, makes an initial payment of $840 an average monthly payment of $41.79, for 20 years, this being for a house valued at more than $6,000 and on which a loan of somewhat less than 90 per cent is available. The first two cases mentioned 90 per cent loans are available. Monthly payments in all three examples do not include taxes or hazard insurance, these varying in small amounts according to the different local rates.

Terms Are Favorable

Home ownership can be achieved today on the most favorable terms and under the most convenient arrangements ever afforded the American public. The method of home purchasing has been completely revolutionized in the last few years. This has been done through the instrument of the long-term single mortgage loan at low interest rates, repayable in monthly installments.

This new type of mortgage loan has made it more attractive and feasible for average American families to purchase their own homes and pay for them over a stated period of time in regular monthly amounts. Home loans today, under the Federal Housing Administration plan, are made for as long as 25 years, carry much lower interest rates than ever before and are made for as much as 90 per cent of the appraised valuation of the property, thus eliminating the need for second and third mortgages.

Plan Explained

Under this long-term arrangement, the home buyer has the advantage of paying off his loan in small monthly installments suited to his income, with the knowledge that when the loan is fully amortized the home will be his entirely free of debt. What would have been a high monthly cost under the old short-term, undiminished type of loan has now become a relatively small part of the average family's income as a result of lengthening the term of payment.

Not only are these monthly payments convenient, but initial down payments on first mortgage loans have been reduced to minimums never before available. Down payments of as low as 10 per cent may now be obtained through the FHA's plan. These small initial payments have brought home ownership within the reach of countless families heretofore unable to accumulate sufficient funds to embark on the road to home ownership.

Home financing plans also have now been arranged to include monthly payment of taxes on the property. In this way they have abolished the old system of inconvenient lump-sum tax payments which the borrower had to face once or twice a year, often at the risk of losing his property through nonpayment of taxes even though he might already have built up a large equity.

Criticism Dies Out

Criticism of these long-term high-percentage amortized loans has now virtually evaporated in the light of experience under the FHA system. For it has been found that these loans work to the advantage of both lenders and borrowers. With each monthly payment the lender is receiving interest and reducing the amount of his loan, while the borrower is increasing his equity and consequently his incentive to retain his home at all cost.

The national housing act, carried out by the Federal Housing Administration, has done much to popularize these long-term mortgage loans with their low interest rates. Interest on these FHA-insured mortgage loans are fixed by Government regulation in sharp contrast to rates and charges on old-type mortgage loans. The monthly cost of an FHA-mortgage loan for 25 years averages only $5.81 a thousand, including interest and mortgage insurance payments and reduction of principal, the lowest cost available under any type of financing plan ever generally offered to the public on long-term high-percentage home loans.

Gay Kitchens Are Inviting

A kitchen invitingly gay with color combines delphinium blue painted walls with woodwork of canary yellow. The yellow woodwork is trimmed with a narrow border of carmine red, and there are carmine handles on the white enamel cabinets.

The chairs and table of the breakfast set are painted blue like the walls and with carmine red seat pads. A red cloth with white modernistic design covers the table and red glasses are used.

The draperies, looped back above the white glass curtains are trimmed with white ball fringe. The cans and containers on the shelves are enamled with carmine and the floor is painted dark blue.

70 Homes Sold, 225 Planned In Avondale

Big Shopping Center Also to Be Erected In Nearby Md.

Pleasant diversity of styling accentuates a popular development in nearby Maryland just across the District Line. It is a community of individually designed houses planned to fit the needs of the average home owner. Among its gracefully winding avenues and beautifully planned scenic vistas, each dwelling stands apart from its neighbor in an artistic individuality.

Such building and planning characterize the Avondale project of the D. C. Developing Co., where 70 families already have purchased homes and where 225 dwellings near a large shopping center will be erected. The subdivision provides for the family of moderate income all the advantages of modern detached residential life. The operation has been planned to make it possible for those held to rigid salary limitations, to leave their apartments and enjoy comfortable pleasures of suburban home existence.

Here they partake of every convenience of the downtown urban areas, proximity to schools, churches, commercial districts and theaters, yet their location permits gardens, green lawns, shrubbery and flowers. The definite purpose of this enterprise is to provide houses above the average for modest-salaried families. That this objective has succeeded is reflected by the rapid sales in this community.

The development includes 42 lovely acres just 12 motor minutes from the center of Washington. Each home lot has a minimum of 5,000 feet (insured by Maryland law), which prevents crowding and provides ample space for flower gardening and landscaping. Other conveniences there include mainline bus service, and high schools, stores and churches are in the immediate vicinity.

There are careful restrictions controlling architecture of the dwellings and the character of the neighborhood. These insure permanently the desirable social level of the locality and prevent a depreciation of property values. House construction and equipment include garage, concrete porch, automatic heating plant, modern insulation, furred walls, weather-stripping, automatic refrigeration, inlaid linoleum, double hardwood floors, fireplaces, copper screens, landscaping, full basements, overhead garage doors, Venetian blinds and shutters, waterproof basements, and pavements.

Cedar Plaster Is Used To Keep Moths Away

A cedar plaster is now being manufactured for moth-proofing closets and storage chests.

Any usual wall surface can receive the cedar plaster provided sufficient bond is available. The plaster is said to cover about two square feet per pound when mixed with water. The finish when dry is of a pleasing natural red color and is said to be fireproof and sanitary.

Iron Hardware Becomes Cheaper

Forged iron hardware, reflecting the true spirit of the period, is being offered the owner of the modest home at prices far below that which prevailed for forged iron pieces made to order.

Not only on the front entrance, but throughout the entire home, wrought iron hinges, door pulls, latches, and other fixtures add accuracy and necessary detail to the period style.

Gay Paints Urged On Cement Surface

The appeal of gay colors may be extended to cement surfaces through the use of special cement paints.

More practical than the ordinary paints for the purpose, special cement paint contains no materials that would be affected by the chemical action of lime, alkali, or water. Besides cement, the paint is adaptable for use on stucco, masonry, cement block, brick, stone, and tile.

Widely used for painting the interiors of basements, some types of cement paints can be applied on fresh plaster or concrete without waiting for the material to dry.

Modern Appointments for Moderate-Priced Dwellings

High Quality Equipment and Fixtures Shown

Builders Include Latest Features In Low-Cost Homes

Today's man of low income will find equipment in the moderate cost home he buys that only a comparatively few years ago was considered luxuries and only for those in high salaried classes. He has at least 20 different type houses from $4,000 to $7,000 to choose from, all incorporating latest comforts and conveniences.

While it has been the rule in economics that a week's salary should be saved for one month's rent, there are those who know, particularly those with several children in the family, that under present-day circumstances, this arrangement is not always workable.

It is someties sound judgment on the part of prospective buyer of modest means to give careful attention to the amount of money he can actually afford for house now and for some years to come, as no statistician can determine precisely what a person will be earning 5, 10, of 20 years from now.

As a result, it is often a better decision for the purchaser to acquire a house slightly less in cost, than another residence that might be easy to carry at buying time but a financial burden some years hence. Again, the man in the low income classification has a very large group of homes within his means to select from and in the choosing of which he is not restricted as to size, type and location.

Many Choices Here

The metropolitan territory of Washington abounds with low cost communities of houses of all kinds to suit the modest purse. At no time in the history of home-building in this area has the small-salaried buyer had such a wide and varied assortment of dwelling from which to pick. In this array he can expect and obtan a superb range of designs.

He can study, detached, semi-detached, community and row types prior to making his decision. He is shown stone or brick structures or a combination of both, as well as those which present a mixture of brick and clapboard, or of solid frame. Most of these residences are equipped with the finest makes of heating apparatus. Modernly equipped kitchens and tiled baths, many of the latter with showers are almost universal in the floor planning.

But greatest in these offerings are the values when considered in the light of yesteryear.

Take air conditioning. It was not generally practical for residential installation in 1929. Today it is available in hundreds of homes as a regular item.

Automatic heat is standard equipment in the home of 1939, eliminating labor, cutting fuel costs, bringing cleanliness and health within the reach of the average family. Complete insulation is now obtainable. Manufacturers of rock wool, composition board and other insulating materials have so standardized materials and reduced prices that today's homes are kept cooler in summer, warmer in winter at an actual saving in cost.

Better-built basements and the compactness of heating equipment have added 15 per cent to the usable space in the home at no increase in cost to the purchaser. A few years ago the expensive home may have been equipped with a mechanical refrigerator, but that was about all. Many of today's modest cost homes have the most modern refrigeration and cooking equipment, compact cabinet units, fine sinks and inlaid linoleum floors.

During the last ten years the quality of plumbing and electric fixtures, builders' hardware, sash and doors has been raised substantially without increasing cost, and restyled to add immeasurably to the beauty of the home.

Ten years of experience has shown the manufacturer ways to make better materials for less: the builder how to assemble them into a better home without increasing the cost to the low-salaried purchaser who gets more for his money today than in 1929. Then local finance companies advertised building loans at 6 per cent. These companies now advertise loans at a lower rate. Today's home buyers save thousands of dollars by the cheaper money now available.

Special Heaters For Bathrooms

One way of solving the problem of how to bring comfort to a hard-to-heat bathroom is by installation of a radiant type electric heater. One type is logically shaped to utilize wall space to greatest advantage and to flood the lower portion of the room with quick steady heat.

The limited width provided by most bathrooms permits placement of these units in wall spaces formerly too narrow for the installation of any heater. Its unusual height radiates the heat from head to foot.

These heaters are also adaptable to small bedrooms, breakfast rooms, and other rooms of 700 cubic feet or less, where instant heat is desired.

New Device Closes Screen Door Quickly

Screen doors are more convenient when there is some mechanism to close them quickly. Door-controlling devices can be obtained which hold the door under control from start to finish of the closing operation and provide a separate "slow or fast" adjustment at the latch.

Fair Home Replica to Be Opened Today

Permanent Offers Demonstration House In Wyngate, Md.

Opening of the Wyngate, Md., replica of No. 1 demonstration home in the Town of Tomorrow, at the New York World's Fair, will occur today, it is announced by George W. DeFranceaux, president of Permanent Homes, Inc., developers and builders.

Known as the "dual-duty" house because of the many uses for which its rooms are designed, it has been furnished by the Hecht Co. Although it contains but four rooms and bath, it is said to have all facilities of an eight-room house. For example, its living room can be used as a solarium, library or music room; its dining room, as a cocktail lounge or a secluded den; the master bedroom, as a dressmaker's shop or a household office; the garage, as a recreation room; utility room, as a photographer's dark room.

The original home at the Fair was sponsored by National Home Builders Bureau, Inc., which granted a franchise to Permanent Homes, Inc., to reproduce the home in its 36-acre tract west of Old Georgetown road, 2 miles from the intersection of Wisconsin avenue. Land was acquired by the corporation as part of the Spragge estate. The land has been subdivided and approved by the FHA with minimum lot frontages at 60 feet. The site is in an area adjoining United States Naval Hospital and National Center Institute.

A series of basic small home designs have been developed, offering a variety of floor plans and exterior architecture. The lowest cost home, purchasable on terms less than $30 a month—will contain two bedrooms, tile bath, living room with vestibule entrance, kitchen with cooking range and cabinets, and a dinette. Air conditioning will be standard, with gas heating and full basement provided.

pupils up to and including high school grades. Two elementary schools are within easy walking distance and the way to each of them is free from traffic hazards. The University of Maryland is within 12 minutes' distance.

Sligo Valley Park provides unlimited recreational facilities for this growing territory. This reservation is 3 miles long and will contain 150 acres. In conformity with a policy of encouraging all outdoor sports, more than 30 tennis courts have been planned in the reservations serving the area. In addition, the planning program includes half a dozen baseball and three soccer fields, numerous handball and basketball courts, various picnic grounds in beautiful groves with many shallow wading pools for children.

Into the newest Post Display Home have been incorporated results of successful building. In home construction it requires thought and experience to determine what to choose, what styling is most suitable and what features most desirable in building the right kind of house, or planning the most satisfying residential operation. Items of equipment, practical floor planning, space apportionment for the various rooms, effective lighting, convenient door, window, bath and closet arrangement, all must be cared for effectively in the erection of the outstanding home. Its construction cannot be marred by haphazard processes.

Developers Create Ideal Communities

Every Section of Metropolitan Area Has Opportunities

Attractive home developments are arising in all sections of metropolitan Washington to serve its growing population, many of which are in the moderate income group. In practically every sector of the outlying suburbs within a radius of 50 miles of the Capital, lovely communities filled with pretty, modern, well-equipped houses are taking form to shelter a populace spreading in all directions. They are located near shopping and educational centers, parks and playgrounds for the convenience and pleasure of their residents.

A vast network of new streets and boulevards, bridges and viaducts, over which move fast-traveling bus and electric lines, are bringing residents of these new subdivisions within easy distances of their places of employment. A canvass of the residential building field reveals that progressive builders and developers of the District, Maryland and Virginia are paying more attention to the modest-salaried bracket of home buyers than any other group.

More for Money

Investigation of these home offerings will convince even the casual observer that the average home buyer of moderate means today is receiving a larger and better house for his money than at any other time in the annals of Washington building. There are several reasons for this. First is the enormous and steady increase of the National Capital's population.

Expansion of the national defense is sending Federal employment upward to a new high mark. Latest statement of the United States Civil Service Commission shows that with addition of 1,200 employes to various Government agencies in Washington, the Federal force arose to another new local record of 125,842, which is approximately 8,000 over the World War high of 1919.

In the District the regular pay roll is carrying 109,722 full-time employes, 6,158 of whom are listed as force account workers engaged on construction projects and at the Navy Yard. A great majority of this personnel is in the modest-salaried classification and a promising customer for the fine home products enterprising builders of the city and neighboring counties have ready for its need.

Another factor can be traced to a healthy and spirited competition on the part of builders. Developers, in an effort to dispose of their offerings with an economic promptness, are including as many inducements in the way of sound construction, convenient room planning, comfortable arrangement, and modern equipment that price will allow.

Variety Provided

A moderate-income man will be particularly hard to satisfy if he cannot find a modest-priced home to suit his requirements in today's, last Sunday's or coming Sundays in this section of The Washington Post. He can have a row house with stone front, a stone or brick semi-detached house. A detached house either in the city or its environs, improved by several durable exterior materials that mean many years of wear, is also ready for his selection. That he will receive a better built house for the money than he would have had 10 or 12 years ago is a certainty.

The Week In Business

Flint, Mich.—Expansion of the Buick factory sales organization involving creation of a new central region and promotion and reassignment of eight zone managers, was announced here by W. F. Hufstader, general sales manager. The change is the largest effected in the sales staff since its reorganization more than five years ago and is being made, according to Mr. Hufstader, to meet requirements of the exceptional increase in sales volume experienced by this division of General Motors Corporation.

Promotions include advancement of C. C. Edmonds, formerly Chicago zone manager, to central regional manager with headquarters at the home office in Flint; appointments of J. B. Nash, formerly manager of the Buffalo zone, as Chicago manager; R. M. McCormick, formerly Detroit zone manager as manager of the Philadelphia zone, succeeding J. J. Costello who has become Buick dealer in Syracuse, N. Y.; Clarence H. Rey, formerly zone manager at Washington, D. C., as Detroit zone manager; T. J. Crosby, formerly assistant zone manager at Detroit, to head the Washington zone; John G. Davies, formerly Pittsburgh zone manager, as head of the Buffafflo zone, and Fred Barnes, formerly assistant zone manager in Chicago, as zone manager in Pittsburgh.

Mr. Hufstader said other appointments to fill vacancies created by the changes will be made soon. All changes are effective immediately, he said.

A new and timely book on selling has been published by William E. Holler, who has achieved national recognition during the last six years as general sales manager of Chevrolet Motor Division of General Motors Corporation.

"Step Out and Sell" is the title of Holler's interesting book and in its 10 pages may be found his philosophy on selling and ideas of relationships with people, customers, salesmen, dealer outlets and those who manufacture the product.

With a breezy style of writing that sustains reader interest, Holler blasts the old type "sales primer." He makes selling a profession of human beings and both directly and indirectly makes the point as to their importance in modern industry.

The book is primarily of importance to those who sell. It contains the ABC's of salesmanship; inspires by brief reference to dramatic event or man; draws a lesson from some procedure in the vast sales organization of Chevrolet without mentioning the company, and it never tires.

Nine thousand Chevrolet dealers have been so inspired by Holler during the last six years that they have been leaders in the automobile industry in sales. They have sold more than $5,000,000,000 worth of merchandise in that time. Members of this sales organization point to Holler and his policies as most important contributions to their success.

Restful Colors Efficiency Aid

Efficiency and high production in factories are aided by proper color-selection, according to industrial studies. No longer is it considered necessary to paint machines and factory walls a depressing gray. Restful and taseful colors are chosen instead—with such parts of the machinery as are particularly dangerous done in sharp contrast.

Employes are also inclined to take better care of machinery that is finished in light colors and not let accumulations of dirt and grease detract from its clean appearance.

In one air-conditioned, windowless factory a pleasant shade of orange is applied to the machinery and this apparently has a stimulating effect on the workers. In another factory where much glass is used in the walls, the machinery is painted in light pastels.

Swift & Co. Plan To Sell Libby Is Approved

Control Divestment Hailed by U. S. as Antitrust Victory

A plan for Swift & Co. to divest itself of ownership in the Libby, McNeil & Libby firm and for subsequent public sale of Libby stock estimated at more than $20,000,000 was approved by Justice Bailey in District Court yesterday.

His order was based on a consent decree entered in 1920, under which Swift and other packing companies were enjoined from manufacturing or distributing more than 100 commodities, including canned goods and other foodstuffs. Justice Department officials said approval of the divestment plan was a major antitrust victory.

The plan provides for recapitalization of the Libby company within 60 days, with new $7 par value common stock shares to be issued. The new stock would be exchanged share for share with the present "no par" common and at the rate of 12 shares for one of the present $100 par value preferred.

Financial reorganization is scheduled for completion before February 1 next year and afterward application will be made for registration by the Securities and Exchange Commission for sale by Swift of its 3,018,639 shares of the new common to a group of 11 underwriters, headed by Glore, Forgan & Co., with the price to be set at the time of sale. Public sale of the stock is planned for early in May, 1940.

Swift was ordered to deposit its Libby holdings, including 96,684 shares of preferred stock and 1,858,431 of common, with a Chicago bank in July, 1933, and a trustee was appointed to dispose of the stock as early as possible at a reasonable price.

Wheat Prices Rise on Buying Laid to Mills

Opening Spurt Lifts Futures a Cent or More a Bushel

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Nov. 18.—A spurt of buying soon after the start of trading today gave the wheat market its best action of the week and lifted prices a cent a bushel or more.

Purchasing was credited to milling interests presumably in connoction with flour business which has been dragging since the heavy inventory accumulation immediately following declaration of war. Buyers were particularly active in December wheat, which advanced as much as 1¼ cent at one stage to 88½. Shifting of hedges into deferred contracts also strengthened the December relivery.

Only light, scattered rains were reported in the hard winter wheat belt and this precipitation was confined mostly to Eastern sections which received some relief last week. Unprecedented fall drought persisted in the West and the forecast promised no immediate relief although a continuation of unsettled weather was in prospect in the East.

Wheat closed ⅛@1 cent higher than yesterday, December 88⅛@88¼, May 85¾@85⅞; corn ¼ lower to ⅛ up, December 50¼@50⅛, May 52½@52⅜; oats ⅛@½ higher; soy beans 2@2½ higher; rye unchanged to ⅜ up, and lard 10@1g lower.

Soy beans prices shot up to the highest levels since March, 1938, with gains of as much as 2¾-cents lifting December above $1 and May $1.01¾ before there was a small reaction. The buying was attributed to short covering.

The lowest hog prices in five years depressed lard.

U. S.-Owned Mines To Supply France With War Copper

New Yor, Nov. 18 (AP).—The Wall Street Journal said today the French government has made a final agreement for the purchase of its wartime copper supply from foreign mines of leading American-owned companies and from a Belgian-controlled African producer.

Banking arrangements have been completed, it was said, for initial shipments over six months, beginning in December, of 150,000 long tons valued roughly at $42,000,000.

The group consists of the foreign subsidiaries of Anaconda Copper Mining Co., and Kennecott Copper Corporation, operating in Chile; the Cerro de Pasco Copper Corporation, wit hmines in Peru, and the Union Miniere du Haut-KKatanga, the African producer.

In addition, Russia was reported to have placed orders here for between 2,000 and 5,000 tons of copper and for approximately 5,000 tons of lead from American-controlled mines in Mexico.

Reserve Acts As Agent for Allies' Buying

N. Y. Bank's Action May Collide With Neutrality Law

By the Associated Press

New York, Nov. 18.—The British and French governments are making payment for war time purchases in the United States through the New York Federal Reserve Bank, it was reliably reported in Wall street banking circles today.

While some of the leading bankers defended the action of the Reserve Bank in paying out on order British and French funds for these purchases, others asserted some competent legal opinion here raised the question of whether the bank's action may not collide with international law covering neutrality.

Refuse to Comment

Officials of the Reserve bank, who rarely talk for publication, declined to comment, and bankers said the Reserve had undoubtedly received assurances that its action was legal and proper.

Those who raised the neutrality question said part of their interest naturally stemmed from the fact that the Reserve was doing what was formerly an important function of commercial and private banks.

The Reserve's action in making these payments for wartime purchases was said to date from the passage by Congress of the revised neutrality laws.

Not A New Policy

Its action in paying out funds of the Bank of England and the Bank of France does not represent a new policy in banking mechanism, these bankers said, but rather an absence of change of banking policy as the bank's customers changed from a peacetime to a wartime nature.

The Federal Reserve Bank of New York fulfills some of the functions of an official central bank for this nation, and, in that capacity, has for some time in the past acted as a depository for gold and dollar balances of the central banks of England and France, and of Germany as well.

As a central bank(it pays out those funds in this market on order. It was reported, however, that the Reichsbank had not esked the Reserve bank to pay out money for wartime purchases.

Technique Unchanged

Following the revision of the neutrality laws the Bank of France and the Bank of England changed the nature but not the banking technique of their transactions with the Reserve Bank, namely, ordering their funds paid out in specified manner for wartime purchases here.

Thus, Wall street critics of the Reserve Bank's policy conceded, the Reserve Bank has not initiated a new policy, but has abstained from changing an old policy to meet changed international political conditions.

Cotton Advances On Strength in Foreign Centers

New York, Nov. 18 (AP).—The cotton futures market took its cue from continued strength in foreign trade centers today and prices advanced 4 to 9 points.

Forward pressure was applied by straddle buying for Bombay and Liverpool accounts. The differences between New York and Bombay contracted sharply.

The list faltered a little in its swing upward when liquidation in the December contract, plus transferring from this month onward and a sprinkling of hedge sales, appeared. Fresh momentum was given the market, however, on covering for the week-end and price fixing by the trade. Closing prices were just about the best for the day.

Worth street sales for the week were estimated at well below current output. Most demand was for Osnaburgs and heavy sheetings, bought for use as burlap substitutes.

Stocks Close Apathetic Week With Recovery in Progress

Light Buying Centered Mostly on Industrials; Traders, Dubious of Economic Upswing, Stand Aside; U. S. Bonds Forge Ahead

By Frederick Gardner,

Associated Press Financial Writer.

New York, Nov. 18.—The stock market today stepped out of an apathetic week on the recovery side. With attendance exceptionally sparse in boardrooms, bidding even for favorites was light throughout and improvement at the close of the brief proceedings ran mainly to fractions.

Such buying as occurred was centered on industrials and was attributed principally to the optimistic flow of earnings and dividends and prospects for further gains in individual business lines.

Many traders, however, continued to stand aside because of opinions expressed here and there that the economic upswing might come a cropper in the next quarter when inventories attain larger dimensions than at present.

The European war again was a minor influence marketwise, with disappointment evidenced by a few observers that purchasing from abroad had not reached the proportions forecast earlier.

The list started out with the indefinite trends, but firmed up somewhat in the final hour. The ticker tape frequently was silent and transfers amounted to 276,560 shares, smallest for any session since October 14. The volume compared with 1,423,620 two weeks ago. The exchange was closed on the preceding Saturday for Armistice Day.

The Associated Press average of 60 issues managed to emerge with a gain of .1 of a point at 52.1, retrieving the .1 lass of yesterday. For the week this composite was up .6 of a point, its first net advance after three consecutive weeks' declines. Of this 572 issues changinp hands today, 236 were up, 163 down and 173 unchanged.

Steel Rate Frm

Steels were helped by indications mill operations next week would be at or near the recent record peak. In addition consumption of iron and steel scrap in October was placed at nearly 4,000,000 gross tons compared mith around 2,300,000 in the same 1938 month.

Motors had the benefit of renewed hopes the 43-day old Chrysler labor stalemate would be broken over the week-end. Rails did little either way, although October traffic revenues were believed to have touched the highest mark for this month in a number of years. Most aircrafts ended a shade higher, but they were far from buoyant notwithstanding announcements of new foreipn and domestic orders for planes and engines. The question of financinp expansion needs for the aviation industry was still considered a barrier here.

Modest gains were retained by shares of Chrysler, General Motors, United States Steel, Bethlehem, Sears Roebuck, Montgomery Ward, United Aircraft, Speery, North American Aviation, American & Foreign Power Preferreds, General Electric, Allied Chemical, Container Corp., Brunswick-Balke-Collender, Southern Pacific and Great Northern.

A. T. & T. Off Slightly

Off a shade were American Telephone, Santa Fe, Western Union, International Harverter and Bayuk Cigar.

Higher by as much as a point in the curb were Electric Bond & Share, Lockheed and Niagra Hudson Power. Lake Shore and Carrier Corp., slipped a bit lower. Turnover of 65,000 shares compared with 303,000 two weeks ago.

United States Government issues continued to forge ahead today in a bond market which boasted a fair preponderance of gains in the principle groups.

The upturn in the Federals, giving a full half point for several Treasuries, was accomplished on comparatively small turnover. Offerings were slow to come out, dealers reported.

Some Leins Higher

Several low yield corporate liens moved up with the Governments. Speculative ratings were somewhat uneven, reflecting week-end profit-taking in a few of the lower price rails and miscellaneous issues.

Closing fractions to around 1½ points higher were American & Foreign Power 5's at 65, Alleghany Stamped 5's of '50 at 45½, Deleware & Hudson Refunding 4's at 65¼, International Telephone 5's at 49¾, National Dairy 3¾'s at 106⅞ and Portland General Electric 4½'s at 82.

In the foreign division, moderate gains went to loans of Japan, Colombia and Belgium. Italians yielded some ground.

Transactions totaled $3,449,500 face value, compared with the previous Saturday volume, November 4, of 3,773,500.

Boston Wool Market

Boston, Nov. 18 (AP) (U. S. Dept. of Agr.).—Domestic wools were mostly very slow in Boston during the past week. Interest, however was inclined to broaden. Prices continued on an irregularly slower trend which they have followed for the past several weeks, but there was increasing resistance to the decline as inquiries broadened. Graded combing bright fleece wools were quoted steady at 39 to 42 cents, in the greast, for fine delaine, at 42 to 44 cents for half bloods, and from 46 to 48 cents for three-eighths and quarter bloods.

Foreign Markets

By the Associated Press

Amsterdam, Nov. 18.—The bourse slipped a little lower today in the wake of Wall street's hesitant performance Friday. Profit taking was also inspired by the local run-up yesterday, and both domestic and foreign equities closed with small losses in the majority. An exception was Fokker Aircraft, bid up on news of sale of planes to Royal Dutch Airlines with a government subsidy.

FOURTH IN A SERIES OF ADS ON:
How to Borrow Money!
Moderation is the word to remember. Even though money is quickly and easily obtained keep your loan within the bounds of actual necessity. Be careful of WHERE you borrow. Go to a State-supervised loan office where charges and manner of doing business are fixed by State law. Base your application on signature, furniture or car and select any time up to 20 months for repayment. Regard the loan office as a friend who helps you quickly and confidentially with no embarrassing investigation to fear—and use your credit as a sacred trust.

Notables Reserve Boxes For Concert

Leopold Stokowski To Lead Rearranged Philadelphia Orchestra

THE FEDERAL SECURITY Administrator and Mrs. Paul V. McNutt are among those who have made box reservations for the concert that the Philadelphia Orchestra will give at Constitution Hall on Tuesday evening, November 28, at 8:45 o'clock. Mrs. McNutt attended the opening event, but Mr. McNutt was out of town at the time

Leopold Stokowski, one of the most fascinating figures in the music world today, will lead the orchestra at this time. He has aroused intense interest in Washington society, as well as that of Philadelphia, New York and other of the few eastern cities in which he will appear on this brief concert tour, by a recent announcement. He has smashed a tradition of 150 years and completely rearranged his orchestra after long secret experimental work with the assistance of accoustican engineers. Mr. Stokowski already has tried this plan in the opening concerts in Philadelphia and the result has been lauded by critics and public.

IT SEEMS THAT Mr. Stokowski, who spent August and September working with Walt Disney on the music for Disney's latest picture in Hollywood, is now placing all the strings, harps and huge basses enmasse at the back of the stage, against the reflector. Then, down center front, he puts the wood-winds and divides his brasses with trumpets, trombones, and tuba on the left (facing the audience), horns and tympani on the right. It makes one wonder if the audience should take opera glasses along so as to be able to see the "concert-meister" if he takes his customary bow after certain parts of the work where his violin has special duty.

Certainly those sitting in the boxes will have ringside seats for seeing this novel arrangement and, at present, indications are that all the boxes will be filled.

Additional new box-holders for this event also include Mme. Dimitri Naumoff, wife of the Bulgarian Minister, and Mrs. Robert E. Lee.

OTHERS WHO will have box-parties are: the Ambassador of Russia and Mme. Oumansky; the Ambassador of Japan and Mme. Horinouchi; the British Ambassador, Lord Lothian; Mme. Pelenyi, Mme. Irimescu, Mrs. Henry Morganthau, jr., Mrs. James Clement Dunn, Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss, Mrs. Henry M. Robert, jr., Mrs. Frederic A. Keep, Miss Mabel Boardman, Mrs. Adolphe Caspar-Miller, Miss Alice Clapp, Mrs. William Castle, Mrs. Edwin Watson, Mrs. Stanley Woodward, Mrs. Ralph Worthington, Mrs. Ord Preston, Robert Coe, Mrs. Dwight Davis, Mrs. William Crozier, Mrs. Robert Low Bacon, Mrs. Lawrence Townsend, Mrs. Eugene Meyer, Mrs. George Garrett, Mrs. Emil Hurja, Mrs. Edwin B. Parker, Boris Shishkin, and Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Ormandy.

Mrs. Roosevelt will not be able to attend this concert but has given the White House box to friends. In spite of its unusual novelty this program will be conservately classical, including an overture by Handel, a symphony by Mozart, Bachs' great "Passacaglia" in its popular Stokowski arrangement, and two other Stokowski arrangements—"Clair de Lune" by Debussey, and "Pictures in an Exhibition" by Moussorgsky, which will be played for the first time in Washington.

Top Flight Officials and Social Notables Attend Reception After Marriage of Daughter Of Former U. S. Envoy to Chile

By Hope Ridings Miller.

ONE OF THE OUTSTANDING weddings of the winter took place yesterday afternoon when Miss Junia Wilhelmina Culbertson, daughter of the former United States Ambassador to Chile and Mrs. William S. Culbertson, became the bride of Thomas David Luckenbill of New York.

The Culbertson apartment at 2101 Connecticut avenue was the scene of the quiet marriage, witnessed only by members of the immediate families, and followed by a reception attended by several hundred members of Capital society and many from out of town.

A string trio played softly during the ceremony, which took place before an improvised altar in the drawing room. Against a background of smilax, palms and ferns, and masses of white chrysanthemums the couple exchanged their vows. Towering white tapers and standards outlined the bower in which the wedding party stood.

The Rev. Albert Joseph McCartney, of the Covenant-First Presbyterian Church here read the nuptial rites at 4 p. m. Assisting him were the Rev. George G. Culbertson, uncle of the bride and pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Lock Haven, Pa.

GIVEN IN MARRIAGE by her father, the bride appeared in her mother's wedding gown—a creamy antique satin model, trimmed with quantities of Duchess lace. Her heirloom veil of Spanish lace, one of the prettiest I have ever seen, was becomingly draped over her dark hair, and she carried a cascade bouquet of white orchids, lilies of the valley and bouvardia.

Miss Jane Culbertson and Miss Josephine Culbertson were bridesmaids for their sister. Their picturesque costumes were fashioned with tight basques of wine velvet and full skirts of brocaded taffeta combining the wine shade with soft rose and silver and gold threads.

With a gold accent predominating in her gown, Miss Jane Culbertson carried pink roses tied with gold streamers. Miss Josephine Culbertson's similar bouquet was looped with silver ribbon to match the silver accent of her frock.

DONALD PERKINS, of New York, was best man; and ushers were John Scott and Ralph Chattilon, also of New York.

Immediately after the ceremony, the reception got under way. Receiving with the bridal party were the bride's parents and Thomas R. Luckenbill, of Kutztown, Pa., father of the bridegroom. Mrs. Cul-

Cuban Lady Diplomat Believes in Feminism

More Women Should Be Appointed To Important Posts New Commercial Counselor, Senora de Aguiar, Tells Interviewer

By Carolyn Bell

PETTICOAT DIPLOMATS are scarcely more newsworthy nowadays than petticoat politicians. Nevertheless a lady diplomat in the Cuban Embassy is something new and quite interesting. So-o-o we scampered up the massive steps of the Cuban Embassy this week to interview the first feminine commercial counselor, Senora de Aguiar.

Imagine our surprise at discovering we were expected to converse in Spanish! An interpreter was called in, however, and from then on things ran smoothly. Senora de Aguiar is studying English with a will but has not yet reached the stage where she can converse easily. She expects to do so very shortly as she is taking private lessons once a day.

Dressed in typical American fashion, rust sweater, dark blue skirt and casual sport hat, Senora de Aguiar presented her feminist views. At the moment Cuba has four lady diplomats, but she feels that more should be appointed.

Although this is Senora de Aguiar's first experience as a diplomat the job seems to hold no terrors for her. She is the widow of Miguel Aguiar who was killed during the Machado regime. He was a distinguished lawyer and later a member of the Cuban House of Representatives, so she should be well versed in official life.

ORCHIDS COME near being an obsession with the charming, dark-eyed lady. She adores them, wears them, and raises them. At least she raised them in her magnificent Havana garden—a luxury which she will no doubt miss in Washington.

Senora de Aguiar admires American women tremendously. "They seem so aggressive and manage to get so much accomplished," she said. Although she admits to being a good cook the new Cuban diplomat passed lightly over the subject of domesticity.

Like all her Latin sister's Senora de Aguiar is extremely fond of music. She plays the piano well, preferring both her native tunes and the modern classics. Queried on the rhumba, she smiled and said that of course she enjoyed the dance.

Washington is no strange city to the newcomer. She is widely traveled and the Capital has been on her itinerary many times. Although she has been here for several months she only resumed her duties at the embassy officially the last of October.

NEW DIPLOMATS for warring countries are arriving so fast and furiously these days its rather difficult to keep up with them. Jubilant over the latest arrival, J. L. M. Mitcheson, are Sir Owen and Lady Chalkley, for they are very dear friends. Mr. Mitcheson will serve as commercial secretary under Sir Owen who is the commerical counselor of the embassy.

The Mitchesons (Mrs. Mitcheson is here also) will undoubtedly have many harrowing tales to tell as they were stationed in Warsaw during the siege. They arrived in New York last week, coming to Washington shortly thereafter.

RENEWING old friendships as fast as possible are the Undersecretary of Foreign Affaires of Panama and Senora de Chevalier. For ten years or more Senor Chevalier was secretary of the Panama Legation (now embassy) so he and his petite Senora are enjoying their brief visit here.

It was three years ago that Senor Chevalier was transferred from his post here to the foreign office of Panama, where he has risen steadily to reach his present important post.

A GAY MEXICAN sextet out for a bit of night life at the Russian Troika the other evening included the Counselor of the Mexican Embassy and his beauteous wife, Senora de Quintanilla, who flaunted a cerise scarf about her hat which trailed down the back of her smart black frock. Accompanying his own Senora, who closely resembles the Duchess of Windsor, was the secretary of the embassy, Don Justo Sierra. Completing the merry party were the Second Secretary of the Embassy and Senora de Cuervo.

Mr. and Mrs. William J. Kass, whose wedding took place in Washington Tuesday, are now honeymooning in Florida and Havana. The former Miss Lenora M. Sweig and Mr. Kass were married in the Immaculate Conception Church.

Miss Lillian E. Gagnon, maid of honor and only attendant, wore a gown of gold faille with accessories of blending shades of gold, and carried a bouquet of gold chrysanthemums. Raymond Hayden was the best man and the ushers were Kevin Tobin and John Hurley.

Mr. Kass is a graduate of Georgetown University law school.

Vernier, son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert G. Vernier, of Toledo. The Rev. Peter Marshall officiated at the 4 o'clock ceremony. Glenn Hewitt, of Washington, played the nuptial music.

The bride was gowned in teal blue chiffon velvet with a hat to match and her flowers were orchids. Miss Bess A. Drake was the maid of honor and wore black chiffon with gold accessories and hat to match. Her flowers were roses.

William Diebold, of Washington, was best man. The ushers were John A. Mayo and Edward H. Adzigian, of this city. Following a wedding trip to Florida, the couple will be at home at the Governor Shepherd Apartments. For her traveling costume, the bride wore a navy blue suit with matching accessories.

Service Set Saves Pennies To Attend Army-Navy Game

Lull in Entertaining in Anticipation of Going to Philadelphia for Annual Fray; Admiral and Mrs. Stark Have Guests

By Elizabeth Henney

"LONG ABOUT THIS TIME every year there comes a lull" in service entertaining. To the question of "What no parties?" there will be a lot of evasion and changing the subject, and finally the answer, always the same—"Well, you see it's getting close to Army-Navy game time—" and that explains it all. Plain and fancy saving is done around that season, and when the big spree time arrives, trains from all over the country bring servicers by the thousands to the big game in Philadelphia.

The Chief of Naval Operations, Admiral Harold R. Stark, and Mrs. Stark had particularly welcome house guests visiting them in the big quarters on Observatory Hill last week-end—their son in-law and oldest daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin W. Semans, and Dr. and Mrs. David Cooper, all of Wynewood, Pa. They entertained for them at dinner on Saturday evening.

The other daughter of Admiral and Mrs. Stark, Mrs. Harold P. Gillespie, makes her home in Honolulu, where her husband is in charge of the Federal Service Finance Corporation office there. They have two small daughters, Sally Bruce Gillespie, aged 2, and Katharine Rhoads Gillespie, now almost 4 months old.

ENTERTAINING for several out-of-town guests, Maj. and Mrs. Frank Gano gave a dinner recently at their home. Guests included Capt. and Mrs. David Tulley and Capt. and Mrs. Theodore Osborne, all from West Point, New York; Capt. and Mrs. Carl Meyer, from Fort duPont, Delaware; Capt. and Mrs. Colby Myers and Capt. and Mrs. Louis Claterbos, from Fort Belvoir, Va., and from Washington; Capt. and Mrs. Patrick H. Tansey, Capt. and Mrs. A. T. W. Moore and Capt. and Mrs. Clarence L. Adcock.

Stopping off in town for a few days on their way from New Mexico to Panama, Capt. and Mrs. Hans Kramer were extensively entertained by their many friends. Capt. and Mrs. Kramer were married in Washington last spring. Until recently in charge of the construction of Conchas Dam in New Mexico, Capt. Kramer will be detailed to engineering work on the new Panama Canal locks, which will parallel the old ones.

DURING THE TWILIGHT HOURS of 5 to 7 this afternoon there will be gay doings at the Army-Navy Country Club, when several Army engineer officers and their wives will entertain for a large group of friends. Hosts and hostesses will be Lieut. Col. and Mrs. George Mayo, Maj. and Mrs. Willis E. Teale and Capt. and Mrs. Peter A. Feringa.

Honoring Mrs. Robert M. Danford, the wife of Maj. Gen. Danford, chief of Field Artillery, Mrs. Frank Thorpe will give a luncheon party at the Army-Navy Country Club on November 28.

Old friends of many, many years' standing dropped in to Washington on Wednesday from far off Medford, Oreg., and Maj. Gen. and Mrs. Amos A. Fries entertained in their honor at dinner at their home on Woolley road. They were Mr. and Mrs. John Gilmore Gore, who had just been visiting their son-in-law and daughter, George and Elizabeth Henny in Philadelphia. Mrs. Henny accompanied them to the Capital.

THE ENGINEER COMMISSIONER, Col. David McCoach, jr., and Mrs. McCoach entertained last Saturday at dinner for Capt. and Mrs. Clinton F. Robinson who were in town from New York where Capt. Robinson is assistant WPA administrator.

Capt. and Mrs. John L. Person are planning to slip out of town for a brief vacation sometime within the next few days. They will visit in Charleston, S. C.

Capt. and Mrs. Samuel S. Jack and Capt. and Mrs. M. L. Dawson have issued invitations for a 5-to-7 party at the Army-Navy Country Club on December 3.

is an unusual story connected with the Dinsmores' wedding which took place a year ago last summer. They were supposed to have been married in Pistoria, Italy, where Sally Dinsmore was visiting her aunt. Kitty was there at the time, and the major domo of the aunt's villa took charge of all the arrangements. When the bride and groom, resplendent in wedding clothes, met with their respective families and friends at the door of the English church they were faced by the Italian officers of law who announced no wedding could take place for three weeks because of the bans! The couple had to return with their families on what was to have been their honeymoon ship and were married in Philadelphia.

The number will be limited to about 20, and tonight's trial lesson will include George Renchard and Nancy Mann, guiding spirits, the Fred Merrills, Stellita Stapleton, Diana Rowland, Dorsey Fisher, Dorothea Doeg, Bob Woodward and Tommy Thompson . . . Also on the calendar for tonight is Marion Worthington Luke's picnic supper at Riverside Cottage.

They are now making their home in Fayette, Ark., and of particular interest is the news that Bill Fulbright, who is only 33, has been made President of the University of Arkansas.

EDWARD L. CHASE, of Woodstock, N. Y., a noted painter of horses, is holding an exhibit of his work at Journey's End, home of Mrs. Amory Perkins, of Middleburg.

THE OTHER picture, much admired here, is of Easy Mark, Gerry Webb's horse which won several point-to-point races at the end of last spring's hunting season. The background shows a windswept sky and heavy clouds, as Mr. Chase saw Easy Mark and his owner win the Piedmont point-to-point and the Warrenton race last spring, when the weather was stormy.

Other subjects in the exhibition are Mrs. W. W. Trimpi, of the Essex Hunt Country, formerly Miss Becky Lanier; Mrs. Arthur Choate, of Pleasantville, N. Y., and Miss Belle Baruch and her three Anglo-Arabian horses.

Study Club Hears Finn Tell of Nation's Liberty

His Country Protects Northern Democracies, Says Col. Zilliacus, Military Attache; Deplores Losing Freedom to Save It

By Jessie Ash Arndt.
The Post Club Editor.

Finland can protect, both mentally and physically, one of the few parts of the "Old World" where true freedom still exists, Col. Per Zilliacus, military attache of the Finnish Legation, told members of the Political Study Club yesterday. Addressing their November meeting at the Washington Club, he traced the historical background of his country, showing its tenacious maintenance of democratic ideals in the face of foreign pressure and aggression.

"If a nation shall fulfill her duty not only toward herself but also toward civilization and humanity, the only way is that of freedom of thought, freedom of research and freedom of expression," he said.

"Nobody can feel more acutely than a nation which for generations has been accustomed to these human rights and which has been robbed of them by foreign unlawful force."

The danger in protection of mental and spiritual rights, Col. Zilliacus pointed out is that "in order to combat agitation for dictatorship and oppression of personal freedom, even democratic countries easily make the error of restorting to undemocratic measures."

Col. Zilliacus foresees a danger as great in killing parliamentarism and democracy "in order to save it as to kill it in order to get rid of it." He pointed out the struggle that was required firmly to reestablish in the mind of the whole population democratic ideas after they had, as he saw it, been trodden down and despised by foreign despotism for 20 years under Russian domination.

Must Defend Ideals Without Damage

"During these difficult years" he said, "the best part of the Finnish people was fighting whole-heartedly for those ideals. But, if a democratic government puts an end to the freedom and rights of its people, there will be a much bigger moral difficulty to overcome in trying to restore in their own ranks the true faith in ideals, which seem so easy to put away if the motives can be made to sound good enough.

"If Finland can keep her ideals without damaging them when defending them, this without any doubt is a great help to the northern democracies."

Col. Zilliacus, in the opening of his talk, had defined the northern democracies as the Kingdom of Denmark and Iceland, Norway and Sweden and the Republic of Finland. "They form a unit geographically, politically and also largely ethnographically," he said. "Finland is not ethnographically of the same origin but in every other respect it is a part of Scandinavia.

"The physical defense of the northern countries and their free institutions is naturally a question which can lay a heavy burden on Finland. A glance at the map is enough to give an idea of what the situation could be and a glance in the papers of today, sufficient to show everybody what duties this geographical situation can imply. I shall not delve further into this part of Finland's importance for the northern democracies. It is too obvious to every thinking person.

"Speaking of the active part of Finland's importance for the northern democracies. I imagine that we, as a new nation, could possibly avoid mistakes made by other ones. On a small scale it is the same thing as the United States did when commencing her life as a new state without being bound by old considerations and inherited methods. It may be possible for us to do something in developing the methods and spirit of a democratic government. Even our sufferings in the past can be of use. One question which for instance can be of great importance for the good citizen's attitude toward democracy is the way in which political minorities are dealt with. Although it is necessary in many cases to follow majority decisions because it is difficult to find any other way of getting decisions made and matters handled, these should always be made with due consideration for the situation and the wishes of the minority.

'During our union with Russia, we were a hopeless minority of 3.5 millions, against 150 millions. The Russian Duma, the representation after 1905, could always point to 20 or 30 times more votes than our Diet, but still there never has been a more just case than that which the little Finnish minority fought for.

Development of Tolerance Essential

"We, in Finland, may therefore have a clearer feeling of what it means to be subjugated by a majority than other peoples have. And that is why I hope that we could do something in order to develop the spirit of tolorance and understanding for others' opinions. Without these essentials and with a ruthless majority rule, it is to be feared that the parliamentary and democratic systems will have to be embittered adversaries who will be ready to throw away democracy together with majority or, as we say in Finland, the baby with the bathing water."

Col Zilliacus pointed out that since 1335 the peasants of Finland, Sweden and Switzerland had been kept free and independent, and had enjoyed civil rights. With this tradition of centuries, the Finnish people, he said, not only cherish their freedom, but are closely bound together in their common defense of it.

Mrs. Wintemuthe W. Sloan, first vice president of the Political Study Club, presided at yesterday's meeting in the absence of the president, Mrs. Edgar Boyd Kay. Mrs. Lily R. Hunt, chairman of the program committee, presented Col. Zilliacus. The musical program was by Felian Garzia, noted pianist.

Guests of honor, in addition to the speaker, were Mme. Risto Solanko, wife of the secretary of the Finnish Legation; Senora Felipe Munilla, wife of the military attache of the Cuban Embassy, and Senora de Guillermo Gazitua, wife of the counsellor of the Chilian Embassy.

Toy Lending Library Is to Be Established By D. C. Alumnae Chapter of Mortar Board

A TOY-LENDING LIBRARY such as was conducted several summers ago by Etta Mai Russell, juvenile court worker for the Woman's Council of the Washington Federation of Churches, is to be established by the Washington Alumnae Chapter of Mortar Board.

Mary Miller, who proposed the project, will report on its progress at the meeting of the group Tuesday night at the home of Myra Hall, 1601 Argonne place. She is being assisted by a committee of alumnae and expects to have its help in the distribution of toys to underprivileged children.

All chapter members and their friends will contribute toys for the "library." Some will give new ones and others those their own children have outgrown. These will be reconditioned and painted so as to look like new when the boys and girls receive them.

The toys will be loaned to the children for two weeks or more, at the end of which they may exchange them for others. In some instances they will be allowed to keep them, as the plan is to bring joy to the youngsters and not to cause any heart-breaks at parting, with a beloved plaything.

Mortar Board is a national honorary sorority composed of university women, chosen during their senior year, who excel in leadership as well as scholarship.

The meeting Tuesday will be addressed by Mrs. Helen Orr Watson, president of the District League of American Pen Women, who will talk on the Philippine Islands.

CONCERT WORK

Mrs. Walter H. Maloney, program chairman of the Democratic Women's National Council, will return this week from Kansas City, Mo., where she has spent the past six weeks preparing for the annual children's concerts sponsored by the Kansas City Philharmonic Orchestra.

Mrs. Maloney assisted with those for a number of years before coming to Washington with Mr. Maloney when he was appointed as a member of the National Bituminous Coal Commission. He is now a lawyer in the Capital and with their three children, they make their home at 2442 Thirty-ninth place.

Charles Schmelzer, manager of the Philharmonic Orchestra, requested her to return this season to direct the work. A recent Kansas City Star article says she has traveled more than a thousand miles visiting rural and urban schools in that locality, interesting more than 10,000 school children in the concerts. During these school visits, she played records of music the children would hear in order to familiarize them with numbers on the program. Sometimes she selected a motif, played the piano softly and told the story of the piece she played.

Mrs. Maloney served as assistant supervisor of music in the Kansas City schools, was director of the choir and soloist at St. Vincent's Church, radio singer for WDAF, the Star's station, and a member of the board of directors of the Philharmonic Society.

NEW RESIDENT—Mrs. Florence Hibbard, past department president of the Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic in California and Nevada, is now a resident of Washington and is taking an active interest in the work of the Department of the Potomac here.

Gen. William H. Beck Circle of this department is planning a birthday party for Saturday night at the Soldiers, Sailors and Marines Club. A food donation party for the Girls Club and Hospice, 1525 Sixteenth street will be given at the hospice December 11.

Needles Inn Opens At Southern Pines

Southern Pines, N. C.

Marking the formal opening of the Pine Needles Inn in Knollwood on Friday, Clifford Sloan, of Manhasset, Long Island, announced that plans were now being drawn and contracts would be let early in the spring to double the capacity of this modern, fireproof hotel. He announced that an initial sum of $200,000 would be spent in the building of an additional wing. The hotel, when completed, will be one of the most luxurious hostelries in the mid-South.

The calendar of activities at the Southern Pines Country Club got underway Tuesday with the Women's Golfing Organization entertaining at a large luncheon. Miss Laura Kelsey, of Montclair, N. J., president, has announced that beginning Tuesday a number of interesting tournaments will be held throughout the season. Plans are already underway for a Scotch foursome tournament to be played on Sunday, the 19th. The Sandpipers, the men's golfing organization, will act as host at a buffet supper following the match. James Schwartz, of Reading, Pa., president, has announced that this event will be open to visitors and it is expected to be one of the most brilliant social events of autumn.

Fort Becomes Federal Property

Manteo, N. C.

Fort Raleigh on Roanoke Island, site of Sir Walter Raleigh's ill-fated lost colony, is now property of the National Park Service.

The 17-acre tract, containing a reproduction of the first English settlement in America, has been transferred to the Federal Government and officially designated as a national monument. Eventually, it will become a part of the National Seashore, a 65,000-acre national park planned for the banks of North Carolina.

Under the terms of the transfer the fort's open-air theater, pitched on a hill beside Roanoke Sound, will be available for summer-long performances of Paul Greene's "Lost Colony" which has already been witnessed by a quarter million pilgrims to this island.

Couple Wed at Takoma Park Now at Home at Greenville

Mr. and Mrs. Merrill Campbell Patten have returned to Greenville, S. C., where they will make their home following a wedding trip to Niagara Falls and Canada.

The marriage of the former Miss Sarah Herman Parish, daughter of Mrs. George Lee Parish, of Takoma Park and High Point, N. C., took place October 29. Mr. Patten is the son of Dr. and Mrs. Charles Campbell Patten, of Boston and Greenville. The Rev. Other attendants were Miss Elsie Winders, who wore aqua; Miss Pauline Binley, of Tahlequah, Okla., and Dr. Florence Coughlin, of Winston-Salem, N. C., whose gowns were of pink taffeta. The bride's sister, Mrs. Mary Lee Wisman, of High Point, N. C., wore an aqua gown. Miss Joanna Ronk served as flower girl.

David L. Patten, of Boston, was best man and ushers were Roger W. Patten, of Framingham, Mass.; J. E. Wright and I. T. Welling, of Greenville, and Dr. A. T. Guenther, of Silver Spring, Md.

There was a reception at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Hudson following the ceremony.

Collection Boasts Many Glass Types

Glass of varied types and age, excavated from historic areas in the Colonial National Historical Park, Virginia, form a large part of the archeological collections displayed at Jamestown and Yorktown. Heavy wine and rum bottles, thin-sided Dutch gin containers, delicately fashioned perfume vials and drinking goblets, and window panes are included in the exhibit.

There may be traced the evolution of the wine bottle from the globular form with high tapering neck and disk-like collar, commonly used at Jamestown in the early colonial period, to the final development of the moulded cylinder of the late eighteenth century. Some of the pieces were manufactured at the early Jamestown glass works.

THANKSGIVING GREETINGS

Attractive Table Is Vital Adjunct to Thanksgiving Whether Celebrated Early or Late

Mary Haworth's Mail

Girl Who Is Going to Her First Formal Dance Has Questions About Costume and Deportment

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a girl 15 years old and on November 22 I will attend my first ballroom dance. Will you kindly answer the following questions for me: 1. When asked to dance, should I ask my escort's permission? 2. Are wraps checked as soon as you enter? 3. Are a bag and gloves required? Any other information you can give me will be much appreciated. Sincerely, H. E. P.

DEAR H. E. P.: Taking your questions in the order listed, these are my views: 1. You don't ask your escort's permission to accept other boys' invitations to dance. Usually, the boy who requests the dance makes some politely apologetic or jocular remark to your beau as he takes you away. All you need do is smile sweetly back at him as you drift out on the floor.

However, supposing you have been separated from him for two or three dances and he shows up expectantly at your elbow, just when another boy is requesting the next dance, you might ask him: "Do we have this one?" or "Do you mind?" But don't try too rigidly to do "the conventional thing." Just be yourself and have a good time. If your beau has been around before, he will like you all the more if you seem a bit shy and bewildered by the impressive novelty of the occasion. He will experience the satisfaction of thinking he is "showing you life."

2. At private "balls," as for other private parties held in homes or hotels, women put aside their wraps in the ladies' cloak room, immediately on arriving. Then they powder their respective noses, arrange their hair and go forth into the central foyer to join their beaux and proceed to the ballroom proper, greet their hostess or the reception committee, pass along the receiving line, or what-have-you.

3. You will need an evening bag, for toting handkerchief, comb, powder puff, lipstick, latchkey, "mad money," etc., etc. It should be chosen as an accessory adornment to your costume. Some girls have bag and shoes to match; others carry bags which correspond to the material in the dress; others may employ it to introduce a chic color contrast.

About gloves—you will need some sort of hand covering for traveling to and from the party, just as you will need a wrap, and white kid gloves in wrist length are most frequently seen. Long gloves are almost never worn with evening gowns nowadays, and especially not for dancing. So wear short gloves, and check them with your wrap. M. H.

She Wants Divorce, Quickly and Quietly

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have been told that there is a place in Washington where one can obtain a divorce without much trouble or expense. I have no money, but I could pay a small fee. I was married to a man in 1920, at Norfolk, Va., but since then I have learned that he was married twice before, and had never been divorced from either wife. He and I have never been divorced, either, and now he has married a fourth wife. I don't want to make trouble for him. I only want a divorce quickly and as quietly as possible. Please tell me through your column where to apply. P. C. S.

Legal Aid Bureau Handles Such Cases

DEAR P. S. C.: There is no such thing as a "divorce mill" in Washington, where marriages are dissolved quietly and quickly, with little trouble and small expense. The "place" you have in mind must be the Legal Aid Bureau, at 1409 L street northwest (telephone NAtional 8674). The bureau, a Community Chest agency, provides legal counsel and representation free of charge to those who have need of such service, but are unable to pay for it. Also, it directs clients of limited ability to pay to certain reputable attorneys who take cases for small fees. Take your problem to the Legal Aid Bureau, and I am sure you will receive the kind of assistance you need. M. H.

Should Girl Visit Widower for Week-end?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Would it be proper for a 19-year-old girl to stay for the week-end at the home of her beau's intimate friend, where her beau would also be staying, while attending college football festivities? The friend is a widower who lives alone, his daughter having recently married. The girl knows the widower. Her mother does not. However, both the widower and the mother have known the beau and his family for five years. Thank you for any advice. Sincerely, B. H. J.

Better Stay at Hotel Or Rooming House

DEAR B. H. J.; It would be distinctly improper for you to spend a week-end in the widower's home, either with or without your beau as fellow guest. If your heart is set on "taking in" the festivities, you had better arrange to spend the week-end at a campus rooming house, where you will be chaperoned by the housekeeper or landlady. Another thought is to take your mother along, both of you putting up at a local hotel. She could catch up on her rest and enjoy a change of scene while you make the rounds with your beau. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Today's Health Talk

Some Light On Small Pains That Puzzle

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

What is the mechanism of pain in a tooth on the contact of sweets?

This is a fact, but it is without any very definite explanation. Of course, it means that there is a cavity in the tooth. Contact with sweets does not cause pain in the case of an intact tooth. We must assure that the nerve endings which are exposed in the dentine of a cavity are sensitive to the chemical stimulus of sweets. The enamel overlying the dentine of the tooth acts as a protector, and if the tooth is exposed close to the gum margin where the enamel stops, pain will be caused in this fashion.

It is, of course, easy to explain the effect of temperature, hot liquids, or cold liquids, upon tooth pain.

Under any circumstances, the pain is a protective device of nature and means: Go see your dentist.

Aching Corns When It Rains

Why do corns hurt during damp or rainy weather?

The relation of barometric pressure to pains of the joints and of calluses, such as corns and scars, is principally due to changes in the caliber of the blood vessels and to changes in blood pressure at this time.

In a series of about 1,000 rheumatic patients this symptom was acknowledged in over 80 per cent.

Value of Bacon for Babies

Is bacon good or bad for babies, or does it make any difference?

Children's doctors and mothers are likely to advise the addition of a little bacon to the diet of babies and small children. Hygeia, the official journal of the American Medical Association, recently asked several children's doctors whether this was a good practice. Their replies were as follows:

"There is no adequate explanation for the common practice of adding bacon to the diet of babies."

"If it is done, as is commonly said, to give the baby something to chew on, other articles of diet could be used to better advantage, such as toasted bread crusts or zweibach."

"The use of bacon in the diets of babies and small children was for many years a fairly common practice among doctors, but I think it has pretty well died out. It is a little difficult to tell why it had so long a popularity."

"Bacon contains no nutritional factor besides the fat and protein."

"The old-fashioned bacon rind that some babies got in a certain stratum of society is fortunately no longer encountered and I believe had no real standing with physicians."

THANKSGIVING DINNER served in atmosphere similar to the Williamsburg room (above) will carry out the spirit of the day if a lovely damask cloth, an epergne filled with chrysanthemums, Lenox service plates and Hawke's crystal, Kingston pattern, Waterford style cutting is used for the table setting. Mantel decorations of crystal horns of plenty filled with pompom chrysanthemums, Early American corner cupboard and crystal urns on the buffet all lend charm to a festive dining room. ¶Right—Guests will have a dramatic introduction to the home if an abundance of blooms greet them. We all know the secret of placing flowers before a mirror. In the picture here yellow snapdragons and lilies in the gorgeous Louis Phillip vase on the Queen Anne table, flanked by matching candelabras, starts the cheerful tempo which should prevail all through the house.

Spirit of the Holiday Should Pervade Home

Vase of Chrysanthemums or Cyclamen Strategically Placed Can Give Complete New Note of Distinction to Any Room

By Martha Ellyn.

THANKSGIVING means more than a fine turkey and rich pie for it is the big home holiday of the year. Especially should the home be at its best if it is your turn to have the clan come for dinner. The table will undoubtedly have the center of the stage as traditions are pretty indomitable affairs—food seems to have gained that spot for its own from the very first celebration—but still the festive spirit can prevail all through the house.

Martha Ellyn

Flowers are one of the traditional symbols of Thanksgiving. A vaseful of chrysanthemums or a flowering cyclamen strategically placed can give a complete new note of distinction to any room. But, when you arrange your holiday flowers make sure that they are not crowded. They need space to breathe as much as human beings do. Any flower arrangement should harmonize with the size of the furniture on which it stands and the accessories nearby. For example, the vase of flowers placed on a grand piano should be large. Large chrysanthemums, long-stemmed roses, or carnations would be an appropriate choice. Flowers which decorate a small end table are best arranged in a small low bowl. Pompon and daisy type chrysanthemums, sweetheart roses, violets or gardenias would make a beautiful arrangement. On a mantelpiece a low arrangement of flowers is usually preferred, so that the flowers will not be too far above the eye to be appreciated. Gourds combined with fresh flowers are also very popular. If you want to give the women guests a really festive treat, have individual cornucopia corsages made of calla lilies filled with sprays of orange and white bouvardia and tiny sheaves of wheat and bittersweet.

Cut Stems Under Water

If you receive a Thanksgiving gift of cut flowers, cut their stems immediately with the slanting stroke of a sharp knife beneath water. They should be plunged quickly into water with as little exposure as possible, so that there will be a continuous flow of moisture circulating through the stems. Scissors are not advised, because they pinch the stems through which the water flows. The diagonal cut prevents the stems from resting flatly against the bottom of the container, which would prevent any free flow of water. The fragrance and vivid beauty of flowers will last more than twice as long if you will take the time to study their health needs.

Americans could learn much from the Japanese in the art of grouping and arranging flowers. We arrange flowers in more or less a haphazard fashion, filling a vase with different flowers, without an eye to arrangement, whereas in Japan flower arrangement is definitely an art, requiring patience, specialized knowledge and great skill. There are now six different schools of flower arrangement in Japan, each with its own theory and esthetic standard.

Practically the same principle guides the fundamentals—the tall spray representing the "leading principle," Heaven; another branch kept low to denote the "subordinate principle," Earth; and the third branch between the two which represents the "reconciling principle," Man. Other than aiming at a beautiful arrangement, the meaning is to show man's relation to the universe.

Menu Is Only One

In the Pilgrim days a lady could roast a wild turkey, bake a fine pie, make cranberry sauce and many other delicious dishes and the celebration went along in a great way. Now the menu is only one phase of the picture, for an attractive table is as important as good food. With Nature at its best in fruits, flowers and vegetables, a hostess can arrange many artistic settings. A few settings appropriate for Thanksgiving are suggested here.

GOLDEN HARVEST—A centerpiece made of yellow ears of corn, small pumpkins, a sheaf of gold wheat and yellow apples. Goldtint crystalware is a pleasing note.

PINK AND SILVER—Use a silver gray damask tablecloth, pink chrysanthemums in a silver bowl with sprays of tiny trailing ivy. Pink flowered china with crystal glassware in a delicate pastel shade used with flatsilver is a lovely combination.

GREEN BACKGROUND—On a white cloth or lace cloth, arrange a bounteous bouquet of autumn's greenery, such as green apples, gourds, tomatoes, grapes and peppers with laurel leaves. Silverware, china with an accent of green, and crystal glasses will make a pleasing table.

DUSKY ROSE—Ivory cloth with cream colored china of floral design, ruby stemware, a bowl of yellow roses and golden autumn leaves lying flat on the table.

GOLD AND WHITE—Autumn fruits and leaves painted gold arranged in cornucopia fashion; white damask cloth; gold and white china; individual nosegays of gold painted wheat, autumn leaves and acorns; crystal glassware.

A setting using chrysanthemums, ornamental gourds and sheaves of natural wheat makes a distinctive centerpiece that expresses the holiday tradition of plenty, happiness and hope. Purple and scarlet anemones are equally appropriate for a festive centerpiece. One point always to be remembered is to arrange the flowers so that the guests can see each other.

A Trip Through Helena Rubinstein's

Treatments Soon Soothe Taunt Nerves, Bring Relaxation

By Carolyn Abbott.

BEAUTY IN ONE DAY! You have dreamed it; longed for it; thought about it; wished for it—but never done anything about it. Too many other things to do—a a day out for beauty seems impossible. But when you are mentally, physically, spiritually or cosmetically in the doldrums set aside that one day to make yourself as beautiful as possible. Visions of you at your loveliest often flit through your mind. Why not make this dream of beauty a reality? It can be done.

After a series of sleepless nights, my nerves as tight as an inflated balloon, and when I felt my dowdiest, I decided that no longer would I postpone that long dreamed-of all-day beauty reconditioning. So at 9:30 one morning recently, I walked into the Helena Rubinstein beauty salon in New York and hopefully surrender myself.

Immediately I was taken to a private room and asked to disrobe. There I donned a white loose robe. First came a thorough check over by the salon doctor. Heart, lungs were examined and the blood pressure taken. Examination over, an attendant appeared, escorted me back to my room and produced a suit for exercise. When dressed in the bathing suit—or what looked like one—I was shown to the gymnasium and introduced to the exercise expert. My regular standby exercise regime was demonstrated for and checked by the instructor. Most of those that I had struggled with were discarded as inappropriate for my personal needs. From this the instructor proceeded to work out a series of exercises for posture correction and other figure faults. These were repeated and performed until firmly rooted in my mind. The report from the doctor had preceded me and the exercises were mapped out accordingly.

Heat and Massage Next

At the end of this session, I returned to my private room and again donned the loose white robe. This time I was taken to the massage room. There a pleasant Swedish woman removed the make-up from my face, wrapped me in sheets and placed me upon a table. Electrically heated, the table was warm and soothing. A machine was placed over my feet and the lower part of my body. Then eye pads, doused with soothing eye tonic, were placed upon my eyes. After lying on my back for several minutes, my Swedish masseur applied a massaging cream and went to work—from head to toe. Later, I turned over on my stomach for more massaging. All the time the soothing heat from the table warmed me. Again the doctor's instructions had preceded me and I toasted and was rubbed according to the physician's instructions. After several minutes of this treatment, my taut nerves began to relax and I began to feel drowsy.

From the massage room I was taken to the sun room. Before entering, I was given a pair of dark glasses to protect my eyes. Murals presented a beach scene. Twelve powerful sun lamps filled the room with light. Immediately, I stretched out on a warm sand table. I was left alone a few minutes to luxuriate in the beach sand. This soothed me and increased the sleepy feeling. But reluctantly I gave it up when the time ended that the doctor had ordered for me, and continued to the bath room.

In the bathroom a tub of overflowing bubbles of the pasteurized milk substance, product of the salon, met my eyes. For ten or fifteen minutes I reclined in the warm tub of water and bubbles. Later, I was taken to the showers. The water in the showers graduated from warm to cold. After drying off, the Swedish woman applied a body lotion. And then back to my room to dress in my own clothes.

Luncheon Is Served

Next I was taken to another floor and left in charge of Miss Brown, a comely Irish woman. Oil was applied to my hair, then I was placed under the steamer. At that point in walked a girl with my lunch. It consisted of melon, fruits and raw vegetables. The Sunswept Crescent was made as follows:

Center one piece of melon with alternative sections of orange and grapefruit. Put slices of strawberries between sections, over top sprinkle a few chopped peas.

Around the melon was grated Zucchini and radish. Also, grated white squash, grated carrot, dash of chopped green pepper. And grated yellow squash, dash of chopped limas garnished with parsley. Coffee, thin wafers, and a fruit dessert were served. This was part of the cosmetic diet, consisting of 21 vegetables that Mme. Rubinstein has worked out.

By the time I had finished eating the steaming of my hair came to an end. This was followed by a shampoo and a session with Joseph, the hair stylists, who designed a new coiffure for me." Please give me something practical and becoming that I can keep myself with little trouble," I requested.

Much to my surprise, Joseph agreed and complied therewith. While my hair was drying, Miss Brown appeared again and manicured my fingernails. When thoroughly dry I was then escorted to the facial room. Wrapped in blankets with my head and feet peeping out, I reclined for the facial, and pedicure.

Doctor Checks on Patrons, Prescribes Correct Exercises

A pert Frenchwoman with straight black hair, bright blue eyes and bangs began the facial. First my face was cleaned thoroughly with a herbal cleansing cream. Second step was the application of an astringent that made the skin tingle. Then my face, neck and upper arms were covered with massage cream. The soothing effect of the facial even with the gentle spanking around the chin area relaxed all the muscles in my face, erased tired lines and left a glow. Massage cream was removed and a special pore mask applied. In the meantime, the pedicure was in full swing. Eye pads saturated with a herbal eye tonic were placed upon my eyes. There I remained for 10 or 15 minutes until the pore mask had drawn the impurities from my skin. Later this was removed, astringent again applied, then a "Town and Country Make-up Film" was put on. A new rouge, lipstick and powder, "Opalescent" that give a luminous glow to the skin was added along with a blue eyeshadow and blue mascara. This new "Opalescent" make-up leaves the skin, soft, and as dainty looking as that of a Dresden doll. After the final expert touches by the facial specialist I returned to the hair stylist, who combed and brushed my hair to harmonize with my hat and features. All the time that Joseph was arranging my hair he gave instructions as to how I should care for it daily.

Hat and coat on—about 4:30 p. m., feeling equal to any occasion, I dashed to the St. Regeis with friends. And for once I felt as swanky as the exclusive St. Regis clientiele itself.

A Woman's New York

Luise Rainer Finds New York A Sad Town

New York, Nov. 18.

THE PRETTY LTTLE girl with the very sad eyes sits cuddled up in an armchair at the Waldorf Astoria and tells me all about it. The apartment seems much too warm, but Luise Rainer tells me: "I am cold. It always seems cold here in New York. Also it frightens me and makes me lonely."

Alice Hughes

Luise was born in Vienna in 1912, and her girlhood was first married by the war and then by a revolution. She thinks that is the reason for her endless hunger for peace. She finds it in the country, with the grass and trees, and then she feels that she is really living.

Although she is glad to be back in America, she can't get used to this crazy town. The excitement and noise completely throw her, and that is why she keeps her hotel windows tightly closed. Luise told me she would stay in New York, even though living here tortures her, if she could find a good play to do. If this is impossible she'll go back to Hollywood, for she hasn't made a picture in a long time.

"I think the two Academy Awards they gave me for 'The Great Ziegfeld' and 'The Good Earth,' really did me harm because when I made one bad picture they treated me as though I had never done anything good at all. All I want in life is to be a good artiste, but how is that possible when one month they tell you you are a genius and the next they call you worthless. It is very frightening."

Hollywood Can't Find A High School Girl Who Wants to Act Her Age

So Broadway's Betty Field, Now 23, Takes Over the Kid Roles And Was Co-Starred in Three Movies

By Lucie Neville

Hollywood.

The movies have a good supply of child brides, adolescent divorcees and high school widows. But when they begin casting 'teen-age pictures, they have to go into the 20's. Hollywood's precocious youngsters want to be romantic women-of-the-world instead of ingenues. They can't—and won't act their ages.

So a 23-year-old Broadway star, Betty Field, is doing it for them because she herself once was typically, painfully young. She hasn't forgotten the humiliations of wearing braces on her teeth and having boy friends who were something less than killer-dillers.

Also, Miss Field has an impressive theatrical background most of young Hollywood lacks. Which is the reason she was co-starred in her first three movies.

The few adolescents whose screen and real-life ages coincide are boxoffice toppers because of this rare ability to act young—and because their producers keep them out of night clubs and chase away steady beaus.

But the majority of movie misses are glamour gals, cuties or dramatic actresses who were getting fan mail when other brats were passing notes in public school, playing worldly-wise roles before they were allowed to sign their own contracts.

Most of them can't portray the awkward age because they never knew it. Few would risk looking as unattractive in their first picture as did Betty Field. Even actual students, hired as extras for Paramount's "What a Life," didn't believe she would look like them on the screen.

"When the director, Ted Reed, went to a high school here to pick the extras he took Jackie Cooper and me along," Miss Field said. "And it was a job finding ones who looked young enough. Then a thin, awkward girl came up to me and asked bashfully if I thought she had a chance. When I said I believed so, she looked around carefully, pushed up her lip with a finger and whispered, 'Do you think these would be against me?'

"The poor kid had braces on her teeth! And when I said, 'Why, no . . . as a matter of fact, I wear some myself in the picture,' she looked at me so reproachful. She thought I was making fun of her. She knew no movie star ever wore braces on her teeth.

"But I did. For four years. Also I just missed having to wear glasses to keep from being cross-eyed. And with my buck teeth and lank hair, glasses would have been the final blow. In high school we all imitated the most popular girl, who had long black hair, done in a Spanish knot on the back of her neck. Only mine always slid down. I wouldn't be 14 again for anything on earth!"

Lived in Seclusion Five Months

Not many people in Hollywood know what she looks like now. She made three pictures in five months, lived in a venerable residential hotel, and stayed out of night clubs and gossip columns. Studio workers probably wouldn't recognize her off the set—a slim, shapely youngster with gray eyes, yellow-brown hair brushed off her forehead, and an easy, wide, toothy grin. The frontal braces make a lot of difference, Miss Field admitted. She continued:

"I've been acting ever since I was 8, when I staged my own scrambled version of Shakespeare on a New Jersey hotel lawn. I bullied another little girl into playing Catherine the Shrew, but all she had to do was look haughty.

"I did everything else—posted announcements all over the hotel, wrote the script from a copy of Lamb's Tales from Shakespeare, collected the costumes and the admissions—a total of 34 cents, at 2 cents a head. I don't know what happened to my business and executive ability. I certainly haven't done as well since."

When she reached the matinee-idolatry stage and her mother took her to see stock company performances in Newark, Betty Field hung around stage doors and pestered the actors for jobs. She actually got one, an extra with Rowland Edwards' company, and was promoted to the role of a maid who screamed at discovering a murder.

There wasn't any choice then between being a social outcast and a star on the stage, so she said an unregretful good-by to Morristown, N. J., and entered New York's Academy of Dramatic Arts.

She and two other girls shared a one-room, ground-floor apartment on New York's lower west side—a district tough enough so that the timorous Miss Field ran every step of the way between the subway station and home.

So when Miss Field got her first paying part, as an understudy in an Ernest Truex play, she moved grandly into an apartment of her own. But she gave it up in a month when she went to London with a company of the college comedy, "She Loves Me Not."

Back on Broadway for "Page Miss Glory," she played several bits.

There was a season of understudying principals who remained in the best of health and spirits, then the feminine lead in the Boston company of "Three Men on a Horse," and a cross-country tour as the girl in "Boy Meets Girl."

On Broadway, "Room Service," "Angel Island" and "What a Life" followed and she was playing the erring adolescent daughter of "The Primrose Path" (Victoria Lincoln's "February Hill") when Paramount signed her.

No One Paid Much Attention to Her

This list of experience was a little embarrassing to her studio because it had publicized her as 17, the same age as her co-star, Jackie Cooper. Not that it bothered much about ballyhooing her—she wasn't a glamour girl.

She believes now that maybe she should have dressed up a little for Paramount. About all they ever saw her wear was her sweater-and-skirt wardrobe of "What a Life"—plus braces. The youngsters in the cast paid her little attention and Jackie Cooper was a little disappointed that his current girl friend didn't have Miss Field's role.

Also, the movie kids were amazed that anybody who looked and behaved like a cool, shy little sub-deb really considered acting a job. "The thing I noticed most was how anxious the kids were to get through," Miss Field said. "They all act as if the studio were school, and they couldn't wait to be dismissed, jump in their cars and get away.

"I guess the person I talked to most was the dog-man on the "Seventeen" set—he owns the mongrel poodle that I carry when I play Lola Pratt. My mother raises Irish water spaniels and I know quite a lot about dogs. So the man and I would sit with the poodle and talk about what was good for distemper and sarcopic mange and interesting things like that until I was called for a scene."

Naturally, it was with some relief that she went on loan to Hal Roach for the sexy little tough in "Of Mice and Men"—a role coveted by every blonde in Hollywood who ever had played a gangster's moll or hussy. It's a far more important part than it was in the stage play or in Steinbeck's book.

Hollywood hadn't visualized Miss Field without her frontal braces. Even now, the only difference it can see is that she has curled her hair and put on a dug-out dress, mesh hose and bedroom slippers with coq feathers. The only explanation movietown can give is, "I guess the kid can act."

This New York

By Lucius Beebe

All the world now knows most of the details of the hell that breaks loose on the stage at the Music Box where Old Whiskers Woolley is doing savage things to the rest of the cast of "The Man Who Came to Dinner," but it also seems there is enough vitality left in the participants in this scrammy charade to provide a little hell of their own backstage. There never was a Kaufman-Hart cast which wasn't able to declare some dividends of uproar after the curtain was down. Mostly, of course, the present horseplay centers around the wicked Mr. Woolley, whose favorite evening's gag is an attempt, usually successful to break up John Hoysradt in his part as Noel Coward. Mr. Woolley is offstage part of the time Hoysradt is on, and if by any device of costume or capers he can upset his fellow player the evening is chalked up as a huge triumph.

The other night Monty was on hands and knees, offstage but in full view of Hoysradt, with a piano-lamp shade (provided by Edward Fisher) on his head and a grass hula skirt around his middle, going through a complete Ferdinand the Bull routine and mowing and gibbering in a manner generally esteemed by the rest of the cast to be highly diverting. Suddenly he felt a basilisk stare behind him and turned to find Mr. Hart giving him what was plainly the fish eye.

Monty's other gag of the evening is getting Le Roi Operti to give his final offstage scream for him, on the excuse that his voice is spent, which makes Mr. Operti a sort of stand-in for a yell.

The current madhouse project is a stage hand's version of "The Man Who Came to Dinner," scheduled for presentation some time along Christmas, and, as though she didn't have enough on her hands at the moment with casting two road shows of the company, being cast by Myra Streger, who selected the original company for the Messrs. Hart, Kaufman and Harris. The stage hands' performance is expected to exploit all the possibilities in the play not incorporated in the original production. Bob Richie, the chief electrician, is slated to play the Woolley role; Jenny Fuld, who has been wardrobe mistress at the Music Box since the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, will impersonate Carol Goodner, while, because of his imaginative use of lamp shades as articles of attire, Mr. Fisher is designing the costumes. The chief stage-crew wag at the Music Box is Sammy Rosaman, the prop man, who makes Miss Goodner give him a kiss each evening before he lets her out of that Egyptian sarcophagus, and, as a character only vaguely reminiscent of Noel Coward, he is taking the John Hoysradt role. Mr. Rosaman stands in the wings nightly, imitating the Hoysradt technique, to the vast edification of the rest of the company, and is considering playing the part in Yiddish. The stage hands' "The Man Who Came to Dinner" should provide the only conceivable improvement over the original script.

As president of the Waldorf-Astoria, Lucius Boomer probably knows the executive and financial angles, the management and involved internal economy of the hotel business as well as any host in the country, but when he ventures into the field of gastronomic esthetics he is liable to pull some of the darnedest bloomers. And because he himself can be an entertainer of Lucullan proportions it is all the more distressing to find him addressing himself to the leading chefs and restaurateurs of the land in favor of the dreadful table d'hote meal and announcing that a la carte dining is a thing of the past. If there is any one objective toward which the various wine and food societies, the Friends of Escoffier, the Societe Culinaire and all the various other organizations banded for the advancement of mature and cultivated dining have been working since repeal, it is to instruct the eating public that reason dictates the careful selectino of unprepared dishes from the a la carte menu and that madness lies in the direction of the table d'hote, with its steam-table infamies and mass preparation. The assembly line may be all very well in the production of motor cars or radios, but the discriminating man wants every individual dish he eats prepared to his special order by a chef who is an expert in that particular field of endeavor, and Mr. Boomer knows it. If anything more than another has served to put hotel restaurants into disrepute it is the warming-over, steam-table technique of the short-order chef and the impersonal preparation of vast quantities of mediocre fodder designed to be sold under a fixed-price schedule. Call it "selective meal" or any other fancy name designed to obscure its actual character, much as morticians prefer "funeral coach" to "hearse," it's the same old combination dinner, usually of inferior material and preparation and always designed for fast and economical kitchen turnover as contrasted to culinary distinction. In the past every gourmets' group of note has made annual gustatory pilgrimage to the Waldorf, and Gabriel Lugot, the chef de cuisine, has been one of the great dignitaries of American culinary tradition. M. Lugot, come out of that kitchen!

A favorite Lambs anecdote in recent years which has had a reverse twist to it ever since the opening of "Abe Lincoln in Illinois" concerns Albert Phillips, the character player who does such a fine job as Douglas in the current rail-splitting saga. Years ago he was involved in two other Lincoln shows, first Drinkwater's celebrated "Abraham Lincoln," where he ticked off the part of Gen. Grant to perfection, and subsequently Drinkwater's less successful "Lee," where again he portrayed the cigar-smoking, whisky-swigging Ulysses S. He played Grant so long and to such acclaim that it became a stock part with him, and managers and casting directors got out of the habit of hiring him to do anything else. He was nearly ruined by his own success, and the tale goes, one night as he was climbing into a hack in front of the Lambs and the driver leaned around to ask, "Where to?" a liquorish wag on the sidewalk

A Search for Movie Talent

By Franklin Arthur.

Hollywood, Nov. 18 (AP).—Jesse L. Lasky, who has been looking for motion picture talent almost as long as there's been a need for it, is back from a swing around the country—impressed chiefly by four things.

First, the yokel no longer exists.

Second, the country has more exceptional ability along dramatic lines than it can ever use.

Third, there are still a lot of mamas who think their daughters are just as good as Shirley Temple.

Fourth, each city has a dozen or so women who are convinced they can step into the shoes of Marie Dressler.

No More Yokels

Lasky gazes on talent with a practiced eye. And he talks about it in a voice of authority. Since 1913, when he joined Cecil B. De Mille and Sam Goldwyn to form a producing company, he has been busy unveiling actors and actresses. The list of those he brought to Hollywood reads almost like a who's who of the colony. To name a few: Carole Lombard, Claudette Colbert, Gary Cooper, Miriam Hopkins, W. C. Fields, The Marx Brothers, Eddie Cantor, Jean Arthur, Rudolph Valentino, William Powell, Bing Crosby, Will Rogers, Gloria Swanson, Richard Dix, Charlie Ruggles, Adolphe Menjou, Richard Arlen. Vaudeville and the legitimate stage provided most of them. A few reached Hollywood and were appraised by the Lasky eye in bit parts. But vaudeville is gone and he says the legitimate stage has little to offer any more.

"So," he explains, "the thing for Hollywood to do is go out and find talent. It's not a hard job. Colleges and universities are providing excellent training. Practical application is offered through many well-operated little theater groups.

"The fact is, there's a new dramatic order in the land. There's a gold mine of talent available. We went to 15 key cities, interviewed applicants from hundreds of miles around. Not once did we find a yokel. I don't think there is such a thing any more.

"Girls from little Texas cow towns, or Iowa farm villages, or Pennsylvania coal communities knew all the answers. They had poise, personality, good looks, the latest hair-do, wore chic clothes and the correct shade of nail polish. Newspapers and magazines, motion pictures and the radio have obliterated the last traces of provinciality."

Lasky is engaged in the third of a series of radio programs designed to bring the screen new faces. The winners, a boy and girl, get R. K. O. studio contracts as featured players. Others may entertain studio offers, but all must promise to return home if work is not forthcoming.

Prize discovery of the series is Linda Darnell, the Texas miss who is the current bit of good news around the Twentieth Century-Fox lot. But others are doing well. Handsome Charles Drake is being groomed with care by the same studio. Able Kathryn Adams showed promise in a recent film with Ginger Rogers. Marjorie Cooley, a glamorous creature, displayed versatility in her sympathetic handling of the lead in a religious drama.

Washingtonian, Too

Lasky thinks some of this fall's selections will go far. Personally and geographically, it's a varied list he has chosen.

Texas and Ohio provide the most contributions. Here are the cities in which they were chosen: Edna Evans, Washington, D. C.; Linda Johnson, Fort Worth, Tex.; Corrine Miller and William Bryan, San Antonio; Joseph Cottle and Le Roy Allen, Houston; Wayne Bagg, Dallas; Juanita Keys, Little Rock; Everett Lee Bonnell, South Bend, Ind.; Mary Dugan, Nashville; Henry Stambaugh and Ruth Landwehr, Toledo, Ohio; Jemison McBride, Phillip Seither and Mary Poeppelmeier, Dayton; Pamela Carey and Raymond Hofmann, Omaha; Alethia Wilson and William Thornton, Birmingham, Ala.; Jean Burkhart and Burt Black-

Out of My Mind

By Katherine Brush

Just Muttering To Myself

Some day I want to see a stage play that doesn't begin with a scene between the butler and the maid. And some day I want to hear a radio announcer change the subject without saying, "And now——" I view with alarm the fad for naming girls after their mothers and calling them "Sadie Glutz, jr." Things were bad enough as it was. I note that taxi drivers' radios are strangely silent nowadays, and have been ever since the baseball season wound itself up. Women in fur hats either look (a) adorable, or (b) like Daniel Boone—but I fear the Boones are in the majority.

Will changing the date of Thanksgiving improve the weather, do you think, or will it rain and hail and sleet on Thanksgiving Day as it always does? I am fascinated by the news that the Radio City guides get fan mail. Celebrities are everywhere in New York, except on the evenings when you are entertaining out-of-town guests who crave to see some celebrities. It seems to me that at least six girls a week are reported engaged to Artie Shaw.

Can it be that we're in for another season of those Christmas trees made out of feathers? What is a woman supposed to do with a bustle under a coat. One of my masculine acquaintances suggests that the word "snood" sounds like the name of a fish, and that if you said, "I caught a 1-pound snood today," it would seem all right. I'll bet he raises hennas on his farm, that guy.

I disapprove of what is called New York clam chowder—with tomato in it. Trucks that are marked "No Riders" always have riders, did you ever notice? It seems that the worst has happened, and that the dress designers have named a color "blushing mouse." Women of America, arise! Are we going to stand for this, or aren't we?

Isn't New York getting windier every year, or am I wrong? What do you do if you need a doctor in New York on Sunday? Nothing equals the speeds with which a waiter will bring you your lunch when you'd like a few minutes for sipping your cocktail—whereas if you haven't ordered a cocktail, there's a pause of about half an hour. This is driving good people to drink, and I think the temperance societies may as well know it.

I'm having a terrible time trying to learn to pronounce sulfanilamide, are you? I love the sound of "the Isle of May in the Firth of Forth"—but I'd rather be right where I am, thank you. Suggestion to the Manufacturers of Diaries for 1940: Why not make a cut-rate job, with pages only to February 6? That's about as far as most of us ever get with a diary anyhow.

The number of New Yorkers who didn't see their own World's Fair is simply amazing. Somehow the faces of West Point cadets look younger than you expect them to. Does anyone really believe that there are "plenty of seats in the mezzanine balcony?" Or that there will be "no waiting after the theater" if you check your coat?

Where do you suppose the railroads dig up those antiquated coaches they use for football specials—and how do they manage to heat them like steam rooms? Who determines train temperatures anyway, and why do they go to such extremes? Some day I shall be found frozen to death in my seat in an air-conditioned car—and there will be no thawing me out, or reviving me with brandy. I'm warning them now.

well, Louisville; Regina Meagher, Richmond, Va., and Sally Cairns, Pittsburgh. Even Hollywood has its entry, George Brubaker.

Most of them are college students or graduates. Miss McBride and Seither attend Antioch College at Yellow Springs, Ohio. Thornton is from Louisiana State, Bonnell from Indiana University, Miss Cairns from Duquesne and Miss Peopelmeier from the University of Dayton. There, except for a universal admiration for Bette Davis' acting, the resemblance ends.

Miss Wilson is a former chewing gum salesgirl, Miss Landwehr a one-time law student. Miss McBride's father is a boiler works owner in Batavia, N. Y.; Blackwell is a Louisville radio announcer. Seither was a seven-sports man in high school. Miss Evans, whose home is in Bethesda, Md., has modeled for photographers and taught public speaking in a Catholic school.

Miss Poepelmeier represented Ohio in the national forensic contest in nearby Beverly Hills last summer. Brubaker, whose father is a Robinson, Ill., lumber dealer, has been studying here for two years. Miss Cairns led an 11-piece swing band in her home-town high school at Roscoe, Pa. Miss Meagher aspires to be a commercial artist. Miss Carey was Omaha's healthiest baby at 18 months. Hoffman, who wasn't in Omaha when Lasky visited there, drove to Dayton, Ohio, to win his place in the tryout.

So it goes. Now they're just youngsters with ambition. A few months hence they may be Linda Darnells and Robert Prestons. At least, they're getting the chance.

GALLUP POLL
CROSSLEY POLL
SOAP
TOOTH PASTE POLL
RADIO POLL
POLITIC POLL

The man-in-the-street isn't the happy fellow he once was. Today, with political and radio polls constantly demanding his opinions, he has become a weathervane of public sentiment, a cross section of American thought. And if he isn't asked his opinion, it's a very cross section indeed.

Just what do you have to do, I wonder, to get your name on Dr. Gallup's visiting list? Do you have to know the old fraternity grip produce references from your former landlord, or what?

Not a day goes by that the papers don't publish the results of various polls and surveys. And there are dozens of others that are conducted privately, and never get into the public prints; advertising men have told me about them. There is also the Crossley poll which furnishes the popularity ratings of radio features. Apparently the consensus takers are as busy as termites, day and night.

Yet never in my twenty-odd years as a voter and taxpayer has one of these information gatherers given me so much as a nod. They profess to be out after cross sections of public opinion; by questioning 600 people they are able to find out what 600,000 people are thinking, and the scope of their inquiry embraces everything from politics to pipe cleaners. There are probably a hundred such investigations going on right in New York at this moment. You'd think that some of them, sooner or later, would get to me. But they never do.

I tell you, it's pretty discouraging to accumulate a lot of interesting personal opinions and then find no one to share them with. It makes a fellow feel that he might as well move to a totalitarian state and stop having opinions.

Several of my friends (all of whom have been Galluped) have tried to console me. "After all, you have an outlet for your thoughts," they say. "You write for the papers."

But that isn't enough. There comes a time in the life of every writer when he grows weary of the verbal posing and attitudinizing by which he earns his bread and butter. He wants to be gregarious and identify himself with the solid citizens who are representative of the country as a whole.

The average man, too, experiences gratification at the poll's sudden interest in his opinions, academic though it is. He may register annoyance and mutter something about "damned busybodies," but secretly he is flattered by the attention. His ego expands ever so slightly at the assurance that others besides himself care what brand of rubber heels he wears, or how many shaves he gets from a razor blade. Although he may go far to the right of the decimal point in the final percentages, he is there, doing his share toward shaping the course of politics and big business.

From a commercial standpoint, the average American occupies much the same position as a British monarch. He bestows his accolade upon certain products, just as the King of England does upon particular hats, boots, biscuits and marmalades. But in this country, manufacturers cannot capitalize on the accolade by labeling the favored products "By Appointment." Every claim to distinction must be backed up by statistics. Hence the polls and the surveys.

There is no denying that these polls and surveys have given the ultimate consumer a new sense of responsibility, which may be all to the good. He no longer says nonchalantly to the drugstore clerk, "A tube of tooth paste, please." Instead, he specifies a particular brand and makes sure that he gets it, for he knows that he may be questioned about it later. His selection of shirts is no longer left to happenstance and the haberdasher, for he realizes that he must be prepared to give reasons for his preferences.

Sometimes this sense of responsibility may become downright oppressive. I know a fellow named Hosmer who, up to ten years ago, was as carefree as an honorary vice president. He had a comfortable income, a good digestion and no dependents. Happy-go-lucky was the word for Hosmer. When he dined at a restaurant he ordered the dishes that the waiter recommended. When he went to the movies he chose the theater that happened to be most convenient, regardless of the program offered. His literary tastes were governed by the young lady at the lending library. On election day, if he remembered to vote at all, he voted the same ticket that his father had voted. It was easier that way.

But about ten years ago Hosmer got caught up in one of the surveys that were just beginning to sweep the country. He was listening to his radio one evening, when the telephone rang. "Is your radio turned on?" inquired an efficient feminine voice at the other end of the wire.

"Yes," said Hosmer apologetically, thinking it was one of his neighbors, "but if it bothers you, I'll——"

"What are you listening to now, please?" continued the voice.

"You, mostly," replied Hosmer, "but—"

"What program are you tuned in on, please?" The voice was implacable.

"Why, I don't know," Hosmer confessed, "but if you'll hold the line a minute I'll look it up in the paper."

"Never mind." There was a hint of well-regimented resignation in the voice. "What is your favorite radio program, please?"

Hosmer's mind groped. "Amos and — uh — Abner," he replied somewhat recklessly.

"Thann kyew," said the voice.

Next morning Hosmer was stopped on the street by a young man who asked him what he thought of the Hoot-Smawley tariff act. On the spur of the moment, Hosmer couldn't recall that he had thought of it at all, so he said that he guessed it was okay. "But I'm really no authority," he added modestly. "You'd do much better to ask someone who knows all about politics."

"Not at all," the young man assured him definitely. "What we want is the reaction of the Man in the Street."

That was an eye-opener for Hosmer. He had often wondered who the legendary Man in the Street was, and now he knew; it was himself. A slight feeling of self-consciousness settled on Hosmer; he looked with new interest at his passing reflection in store windows.

That afternoon he got a telephone call from a research bureau, asking him to tell them confidentially what kind of underwear he was wearing. Hosmer had never paid any attention to underwear labels; he had to undress before he could answer.

As time went on, and the various investigators continued to check up on his personal idiosyncrasies, Hosmer's sense of consumer-responsibility deepened. He saw himself multiplied by 100,000,000. He felt that if he drank one blend of coffee, it would be unfair to the manufacturers of all the other blends; his preference for one brand of cigarettes might be the ruin of all rival brands; his purchase of one make of shoes might lead to the bankruptcy of all competing shoe manufacturers.

Yet with all his doubts and inhibitions, Hosmer has the satisfaction of feeling that he is a representative citizen—one whose lightest whim is respected by the big shots. I envy him. And when I see my friends Galluping off in all directions while I sit alone with my carefully cultivated likes and dislikes, a great wave of self-pity engulfs me. Doesn't anybody care what I smoke, or when I gargle, or how I intend to cast my vote in the next election?

All right, then; I can wait. But I want to warn all research organizations that if they ever do come around to me for a cross section of public opinion, they'll get one. And a very cross section it will be.

'Singin' Families' of Tennessee Keep Alive Ancient Folksong

By Don Whitehead

By the Associated Press

Knoxville, Tenn., Nov. 18.—In the hill country of east Tennessee, the "singin' families" are keeping alive ancient ballads and building a new American folk-song woven about events of today.

From generation to generation, these merry mountaineers hand down by word of mouth the old songs, many of which date back to the twelfth century, according to a recent study by the University of Tennessee. Members of these "singin' families," who love the old homespun tunes rather than the modern swing ditties, have kept alive such favorites as "Barbara Allen," "Lord Thomas and Fair Ellinor," and "The Farmer's Curst Wife."

When asked where they learned them, a common reply is: "Why, I don't know. I just reckon I've always heard them."

Miss Ruby Duncan, a teacher in the Sale Creek School, of Hamilton County, and a graduate student at the University of Tennessee, searched among the hill folk to find songs "they had never seen in a book." And she found scores of them. One day a pupil promised to introduce her to a member of a "singin' family." Miss Duncan asked how old the person was.

"Oh, she's old," said the child. "I guess she's 30."

And so it was Miss Duncan met Mrs. Exona Hughes, who told her:

"If you wanted to listen and I wanted to sing them, I guess I could sit here and sing all night without singing the same song twice or singing a word I ever saw in a book."

Another picturesque character Miss Duncan found was a "tiny, wrinkled, toothless woman, 80 years of age, but remarkably keen of intellect and quick of wit."

"She sang with great relish in her quavering voice," said Miss Duncan. "From beginning to end she sang the story of Lord Thomas' decision to marry the Brown girl in preference to the fair Ellinor. She stopped to laugh in great glee when she reached the lines:

"'Lord Thomas, he had a little bright sword
'That hung up in the hall;
'He took it and cut the Brown girl's head off
'And kicked it against the wall.'"

But the search was not always easy for Miss Duncan, as in the case of the "dear old lady who was afraid the ballads might contaminate my morals." The men she found particularly difficult, because they would tell her "I know some songs, but they wouldn't do to sing to you."

From Miss Duncan's study, it appeared that Cab Calloway or other modern swingmasters might find a new version of "Hi-De-Ho" in such a hot number as "I Bought Me a Wife:"

I married me a wife and I brought her home,
Sinig I sinag I sinew.
I put her in a corner and I called her my own
Timapity wallity banity doodler hytomywilliker,
Bang John Doodler Robinson, Robinson new.

There is plenty of evidence, too, that the mountain folk have lots of fun deriding their neighbors who might try to impress friends by "puttin' on the agony and puttin' on the style."

From a Presbyterian mountain missionary, Miss Duncan learned these words without tune:

Old man in his drugshop, smoking his dirty pipe,
His head looks like a pumpkin that is just a-getting ripe.
He smokes and he chews, and he gambles all the while.
Oh, Don't he think he's dreadful smart, putting on the style.

CHORUS:

Putting on the agony, putting on the style,
That is what the people now are doing all the while;
When you look around, you are very apt to smile
To see so many people putting on the style.

Young man in his carriage, driving like he's mad,
With a team of horses borrowed from his dad.
Pops his whip so loudly, makes his sweetheart smile;
Don't he think he's dreadful smart, putting on the style.

Woman in her kitchen with her box of snuff,
Dipping and spitting for she never gets enough.
She sips and she spits and she cooks all the while,
Oh, don't she think she's dreadful smart, putting on the style.

One favorite with a political slant, growing out of depression doldsrums and a dislike of prohibition, is entitled "We've Got Franklin D. Roosevelt Back Again," taught to Miss Duncan by a school boy at Sale Creek:

"So give me my old Martin, for soon I'll be a-startin',
Back to dear old Charleston, far away;
Since Roosevelt's been elected, we're not a-goin' to be neglected.
We've got Franklin D. Roosevelt back again.

CHORUS:

Back again, back again, we've got Franklin D. Roosevelt again,
Since Roosevelt's been elected, moonshine liquor's been corrected;
We have legal wine, whiskey, beer and gin.
So give me a drink of brandy, and let myself be handy,
For good old times are coming back again;
We can laugh and we can smoke, We can dance and we can joke,
We've got Franklin D. Roosevelt back again.
So come on folks, I'm glad to say the donkey won election day.
We've got things in full sway, we've got a job for WPA,
We've got Franklin D. Roosevelt back again."

AROUND THE TOWN: Two foreign luxury products seem to be catching on in the plush saloons, one of them, of all things, a cigarette, the black-wrapped Balkan Sobranies, whose importers are staging a big exploitation push; and the other, the Mexican Carta Blanca beer, made in Monterey. Folk in California and the deep Southwest have known the beer for years, but it's comparatively new around here. . . . The neatest editorial promotion trick of the week is Harry Bull's "Town and Country" portfolio of recipes from the Stork Club. Sherman Billingsley and his chef de cuisine, Gustave Reynaud, and his seventeen assistants got them together, and T. & C. published them in a handsome portfolio form . . . Tony Williams, the classy men's pants builder, has had run up for himself the most startling shooting suit of the season. It's of blue and white checks, each a foot square, and covered, as to waistcoat, with cartridge cartouches and other gunning conveniences. The theory is it will kill all but the toughest game by sheer terror, and thus save powder . . . A movement is on foot among the more reputable spirits manufacturers to cultivate the old and proper custom of having hotels and restaurants put the bottle on the table so customers can help themselves, and so prevent the substitution behind the bar of inferior drinks. The Plaza, both in Ceasar's Room and the Persian Room, has, of course, always done this. It's the last word in distinguished service and the proper treatment of patrons in respectable premises.

David Niven Studies 'Lurking' And Almost Gets Arrested

By Alexander Kahn,

United Press Staff Correspondent.

Hollywood.—It was at the end of a day's work for David Niven when Director Sam Wood called him over and paternally patted the British star on the shoulder.

"David," he said, "I want you to lurk more in these scenes. You know what I mean; sneak in and out of doorways."

"I've never had to lurk before," Niven replied blandly, "but I'll go home and practice."

Niven is the sort of fellow who will try anything once. And if the director of his current picture, "Raffles," wanted him to lurk, Niven would lurk for dear old Samuel Goldwyn, his employer.

First, Niven tells me, he went home and scanned a dictionary in which he read that to lurk is "to move about secretly or furtively."

Under ordinary circumstances, David is as innocent of furtiveness as is a new-born baby. He is one of those straightforward fellows who barge in with all the noise and rumble of a five-ton truck.

"In order to lurk properly," said David to himself, "I've got to wear sinister clothes."

He then left the Niven manse and walked several blocks practicing his slinking maneuvers by dodging behind trees.

"I was having great success," Niven relates, "and so I decided to 'tail' a policeman who was moving about suspiciously. After a few minutes I had the feeling that the situation was reversed and that I was being followed.

"So I lurked my way over to my house in approved manner, only to discover that I had left my keyes in my other suit of clothes. So I did the next best thing—I pried open a window and climbed inside just in time to escape a dark shadow. It was the policeman I was tailing.

"I opened the front door in a surprise, frontal attack, and there stood that policeman.

"I accused him of sneaking about the place, lurking in a manner unbefitting an officer."

"'Shut up,' he said; 'what were you doing breaking into this house?'

"'I was practicing stealth and furtiveness,' I said. 'I'm Raffles and I've got to outwit Scotland Yard. Are you by any change from the yard?'

"For some strange reason this infuriated the officer and he was about to put his hands on me when my house partner came down.

"'You can't arrest this man,' he said. 'He's David Niven. You have heard of David Niven, haven't you?'

"'No,' the copper replied. 'What was he doing breaking into this house?'

"'But Mr. Niven is an actor,' persisted my friend, 'and this house belongs to him.'

"'What kind of an actor?' asked the officer.

"'A comedian,' my friend replied. 'A very light comedian.'

"'Huh—a comedian,' snorted the law. 'Maybe that explains it.'

'And with that he went off into the night, shaking his head from side to side."

Memory of a Fan Is Short—Says Rosalind Russell

HOLLYWOOD (U.P.)—In Hollywood an actor is only as good as his last picture, says Rosalind Russell.

"An actor is judged by what he is doing today, not what he did three years ago," she explained.

Miss Russell maintains that a film player is either progressing or is forgotten. There is no standard level, she says, that an actor can strike to insure continued success.

"The public expects a top-notch performance every time an actor goes to the post and the public is the final judge of the popularity and standing of a performer."

Miss Russell, currently playing the girl reporter in Columbia's "His Girl Friday," says she is not mislead by whatever praise she may have received as a result of her work in recent pictures.

"People who applaud you today will have forgotten about you tomorrow—if you let them. A great many players have emerged from obscurity on the strength of a single flawless characterization. But if they rest on their laurels, they are forgotten quickly.

"The only way to insure continued favor with the public is to give them the best possible performance of which you are capable in every picture.

"But try doing that some time," she put in, as an afterthought.

Motion pictures are modern entertainment, and its patrons are continually changing, she pointed out. What satisfies and and amuses an audience today will fall flat tomorrow.

"Too many players forget that they are playing to the world," she continued. "They let down because their only audience is the scattered crew on the sound stage. A mediocre performance will wipe out the memory of an inspired performance."

Pages From a Journalist's Diary

New York.

It is often difficult for inhabitants of other cities to believe how closely all business in New York follows the stock market. I remarked to Frank, my Times Square barber, on a recent day that the shop seemed deserted. Nearly all the barbers were idle. Yes, business had been slack for a few days, he admitted. The cause?

"Well, you see, the stock market has been off for a few days. If it takes a spurt in a day or two, we'll be as busy as ever."

It seemed unbelievable that the state of the market would affect the number of men requiring shaves, haircuts and massages. But Frank explained. When the market is booming, market-wise men do not take time to shave themselves in the morning. They hurry to brokers' rooms, many of which are in and near Times Square. At the close of trading, or after selling at a nice profit, they visit the barber. They want to look as prosperous as they feel. They'll take all the extras. A facial massage soothes excited nerves. If there's any doubt about the hair, trim it! We can't afford to look seedy when we're winning in the market!

When the market is sluggish and prices low, the same men will shave at home, or go unshaven and think nothing of it. They will let the haircut go three weeks or a month. That makes a lot of difference to the barbering trade, when multiplied by x, the total number of potential customers.

That same day I asked H. J. Reilly, health gymnasium man in Rockefeller Center, about the effect of the stock market upon his business.

"Well, it's strange, but a boom and a slump both bring us customers," he said. "The boom is best for us, though. If the market opens strong in the morning, we have a rush of new patrons after three o'clock that day. Men who have been thinking about taking a course of treatments to reduce girth, or to improve general condition, suddenly find enough money to make it easy. Their stocks are up; maybe they have cashed in during the day. They come that very afternoon and want to pay cash in advance for a long course. They are smart enough to know that the market may drop again, and that they may not have the cash next January.

"After a long boom gets under way, we have an influx of traders who are overworking. Their nerves are frayed from making too much money. They want relief from tension, and so go in for massages and baths."

"But how could a slump benefit you?" I ask.

"Early in the long slump, we have customers who say, "Well, there's nothing to do at the office but play pinochle. I'd just as well take that gym work that I didn't have time to take while business was booming.' Most of these fellows made enough money during the last boom, and aren't worrying.

"But if the slump is a long one, we begin getting the boys who have worried themselves into a bad state. They have been told by their doctors that they must have exercise and get their minds off troubles."

The reaction of the luxury trade in women's clothes is instantaneous. If today is a bad day in the market, the big stores that sell expensive furs and exclusive gowns along Fifth, Madison and Park avenues may be almost deserted. If the market opens with an advance all along the line tomorrow at 10, by 1 o'clock the aisles will be crowded with customers. Papa has phoned the good news home. Now Mama may have that gown, that coat, and that ring! What's the difference? In the next hour, Papa may make enough to buy a diamond bracelet and never miss the cost, so will Mama please keep in touch with the office?

Thinking out loud: When will men learn that tight neckwear interferes with thinking, makes for irritable dispositions, and lowers efficiency? Thousands of men who wouldn't be seen in baggy trousers, wear shirts that fit badly and shut off part of the flow of blood to the brain . . . Women are much more sensible . . . So Mayor La Guardia has now named the North Beach airport after himself, and will have a chance to see his name printed in big letters out there. But along will come another administration and change the name . . . What ever happened to Hoover airport in Washington, and Hoover Dam? Names changed as soon as Roosevelt could get around to it. And the Gov. Nice highway in Maryland? Name signs all came down as soon as the new governor took office . . . It's really more sensible of politicians to refuse to name great monuments for themselves, and permit future generations to do it . . . Taximan Morris Cohen has installed a little box supplied with match pads, for his customers. A note says that if you need matches you may have them; that if you have extras please deposit here for other riders.

Diary: Pleasant evening at The Players with Neighbor Dennis O'Brien, attorney for theatrical stars, and his old friend, George M. Cohan . . . Edward McNamara, actor once a New Jersey policeman, joins us at table, and there is much talk of Cohan's new play, to open in Baltimore. McNamara has the part of a judge in it . . . Captain O'Brien has been watching rehearsals, than which there's nothing he would rather do . . . Cohan looks tired, has been at the bedside of his ill wife when not rehearsing. But his good-humor is never-failing, and his optimism gives all about him a lift . . . We talk with Otis Skinner, grand old veteran of the stage, active and alert in his eighty-second year. He speaks lovingly of his daughter, Cornelia, who is playing on the road. "She is her own road company," says the proud father. "She gives a one-man show. She plays all the parts. Yes, she does pretty well." . . . Skinner is one of the diminishing company that played with Edwin Booth, founder of The Players. Educated in Hartford, he played his first stage part in 1877, and appeared with Booth in Macbeth in 1880 . . . Walter Hampden, handsome as ever, presides over the brief formal meeting of the club. He is lately back from Hollywood, where he has been working in pictures. His voice has a quality I've never heard in any other, at once soft, soothing, and masculine. He would have made a great salesman, had his remarkable acting talent never been discovered . . . John Mulholland, the courteous magician, lately fallen heir to the magic love and tricks of Nate Leipzig, talked quietly of his plans. Leipzig, it sems, was a sick man for years, but carried on his amazing platform work until two weeks before his passing. Much of the time, while convulsing audiences with the quiet humor that gave zest to his magic, he was suffering intense pain . . . Driving homeward in his car, Capt. O'Brien, in reminiscent mood, tells me of bygone days in the theater, of the war that once raged between the City theater and the Grand Opera House, downtown, of Mary Pickford's early struggles, and of the days when Otis Skinner was playing in Kismet and Maude Adams in Peter Pan.

More and more I am impressed with the fact that most college students take no interest in current affairs. They become so absorbed in what the Macedonians were doing 300 years before Christ that they don't have time to read what the Germans and British are doing today. They can tell you all about Rome of the Caesars, but are wholly ignorant of Rome of the dictator. It isn't the fault of the students. They are actually too busy to read the papers, and they can live their isolated life of the campus just as well without knowing where Murmansk is.

The Theater's First Gentleman Arrives in New Howard Comedy

'Madame, Will You Walk?', at National, Presents George M. Cohan in Stellar Role; Something of Mickey, Judy and the Law

By Nelson B. Bell

IT IS BEING confided by those in a position to know that George Michael Cohan, first gentleman of the American theater—and the greatest "hoofer" of them all—will be impersonating himself in the late Sidney Howard's last comedy, "Madam, Will You Walk?," to the extent that the character he portrays is an inspiration to all entertainers and creators who are able to see and communicate "the gay shape of the world."

BELL

As the miraculous Dr. Brightlee of Howard's play, opening tomorrow night in the National Theater, we are told that Mr. Cohan will appear as the animating force behind the creative and progressive qualities in human nature, transforming taxi drivers into dextrous dancers and confounding the stuffiness of courts and board rooms.

According to report, no happier assignment of a role could be conceived, since, in life, George M. Cohan has been bringing the same influence to bear on his environment for 50 years—53 years, to be exact, for he was only 8 when he trouped as a second violinist with a rich, vellum-bound classic, known to the ages as "Daniel Boone on the Trail."

The temptation, of course, is strong to set this down as the last time Cohan ever played second fiddle, but as a matter of history it must be recorded that his first stage appearance was a sorry flop. This was when the Four Cohans made their Broadway bow at Keith's Union Square Theater, the year of the greatest depression before '29, and a stagehand opined that young George was not up to the family standard as an entertainer. Young George was deeply and understandably miffed and announced his farewell to the stage, determined thereafter to confine himself to song-writing.

The success of some of his ditties restored the pugnacious young artist's self-confidence, so that four years later he found it in his heart to return as a member of the Four Cohans, thereby earning the gratitude of two generations of American theatergoers. This time he was a sensation.

Career Explored Every Cranny of the Theater

IT WAS at about this juncture that your present chronicler picked up the Cohan career. It made its first pleasant assault upon his consciousness through the medium of one of those early Cohan songs—"I Guess I'll Have to Telegraph My Baby" ("I need the money badly, 'deed I do-oo-oo"), being rousingly banged out on a tinny piano by a blonde, who was more enthusiastic than musicianly, behind the sheet music counter of the Siegel & Cooper Department Store, at the corner of State and Van Buren streets, in Chicago. The Four Cohans—along with Ezra Kendall, the Four Mortons, Cressy and Dayne, McIntyre and Heath, Mr. and Mrs. Jimmy Barry, Clarice Vance, first of the "coon shouters;" Louise Dresser, Tom Nawn & Co., and enough others of the stars who made vaudeville great to fill this two-ply column—played the Kohl and Castle time regularly in those remote days, first the Olympic Theater, then the Haymarket and finally back into The Loop to the Chicago Opera House. We methodically risked our attenuated and fragile neck hanging over the gallery rail of all three on their every visit, watching George M. and his sister, Josephine, dance and their revered parents, Jerry and Helen, tend to the more sedate chores.

A few vagrant years in the tropics landed us in Washington just as George M. was achieving high success by expanding the earlier vaudeville sketches into full-length musical comedies—"Running for Office," "The Governor's Son" and the rest. We reached the Columbia Theater, the same one that is now Loew's, simultaneously with the Four Cohans in "Little Johnny Jones." It is of no point to recount here all of the musical comedy and revue successes that followed.

It is significant, however, to recall that the Cohan creative gifts reached out to light comedies and mystery plays, in which music played no part, and that Cohan inspired no end of critical praise as "The Song-and-Dance Man," "Broadway Jones" and in others of his works that presaged the unique position he was to occupy as one of America's great actors. The philosophical touch entered his work in "The Tavern" and later in "Pigeons and People."

In the meantime, he had compiled a brilliant record as a producer, both individually and in partnership with Sam H. Harris; had set the war-torn world's pulse tingling with "Over There," written to the limited notes of a bugle call, and taken his place among the foremost of our character actors by assuming the stellar role in Eugene O'Neill's "Ah, Wilderness," the first serious play not of his own authorship in which he ever had appeared.

Perhaps the fullest fruition of all this was his performance in "I'd Rather Be Right"—the last piece in which he was seen in Washington—in which he was actor, comedian, singer and dancer all rolled into one. The dances he did in the Kaufman-Hart political satire were sketchy recrudescences of those I had seen him do decades before from those gallery perches out in Chicago. When I mentioned this to him backstage in his dressing room, when "I'd Rather Be Right" opened in Baltimore a year before it reached the Capital, his comment was, "Careful, fellow, you're going back a few years." It would be heartening if there were another actor-author-composer-dancer-producer with whom it might be possible to go "back a few years" and encounter only the unbroken record of distinguished achievement that has marked the life of George M. Cohan.

It would be interesting, too, to hear what sort of argument might be advanced that he is not the first gentleman of the American theater.

Another Versatile Youngster Heaves Into View

IF THIS GENERATION is to produce any remote approximation of the theatrical figure who "can do everything," it is not too fantastic to suspect that it might turn out to be a young fellow by the name of Mickey Rooney.

There was a time not so long ago when Master Rooney was stigmatized by thoughtless columnists and "fan" magazine writers as a fresh and over-stuffed young upstart, who needed to be put in his place by some such studio discipline as he occasionally has received from Lewis S. Stone, the judicial paterfamilias in the Hardy Family series of domestic comedy-dramas, in which the juvenile Rooney has attained such renown as the adolescent Andy Hardy. When he and Judy Garland paid their one-day visit to the National Capital last summer it seemed to this column that both were particularly well-balanced, talented and self-effacing young people, possessed of qualities of universal appeal that they did not at all realize. That impression is multiplied many fold by their surprisingly versatile performances in "Babes in Arms," now on view at Loew's Palace Theater.

Ann Rutherford was entirely right when she said from the stage of the Capitol Theater, during her recent week of personal appearances in

Ardrey Writes Praised Play Public Ignores

'Thunder Rock' Takes Place With Earlier Three at Box-Office

By Mark Barron.

New York, Nov. 18 (AP).—Eugene O'Neill and a few other of the stalwarts of the Greenwich Village Theater—that was 20 years ago—discovered that your talents might wait many seasons before Broadway discovered them as a financial hit.

A prime example is Robert Ardrey, a young University of Chicago graduate, who has had four plays produced on Broadway in the last three years, all of them praised by critics and all of them, the critics say, financially a bad guess.

Ardrey's newest one is "Thunder Rock," a robust drama to follow his "Casey Jones," "Star Spangled Banner," and "How to Get Tough About It." All his plays were, for the most part, highly lauded by the critics. The latter two gathered small change at the box-office and "Thunder Rock" seems headed for the same fate.

It can't be that young Ardrey has ideas that will appeal only to the critics and not to the man who pays cash money for his seat in the third row center. "Thunder Rock," perhaps, gives a solution. For one act it is a magnificent play, but the other two acts dwindle into something that doesn't appeal to a man out for three full acts of entertainment and excitement.

Story of a Reporter

"Thunder Rock" is the story of Charleston, an idealistic foreign correspondent who has gotten his first taste of war. He is a good reporter and he has come out of covering the war in Spain with a sickmaking feeling. He has covered his story, done the job as a good reporter and now he has the leisure to contemplate the sorry story this human race has been assigned to cover.

He returns from the battlefields in Europe, quits the little niche awaiting him on the news desk, where he was once excited to cover a 3-alarm fire or a gangster murder, and goes into seclusion as a lighthouse keeper in Lake Michigan.

That lighthouse sounds like the perfect solution for the escape of a good reporter who has seen too much at one time. As a current historian he worried about the future of his people and his nation. As a humane being he is worried if there is any hope to cure our ills, to do anything about the human race, as he points out, such as the cures that Abraham Lincoln, Thomas Edison and Florence Nightingale either recommended or inspired.

A Play of Ghosts

In his lighthouse there appears a series of ghosts, heroic figures who built up the United States in its pioneer days, and also with them appears such heroes of modern day as volunteer batallions who go out to foreign lands to fight for lost causes. Such a one is the American aviator, admirably played by Myron

Pleads Cinema's Need of Training School

Movie producers have more ways of sidestepping ticklish issues than a centipede has legs.

This isn't just a sarcastic wisecrack, either. I know it's the easiest thing in the world to poke fun at any successful institution. Besides, I love Hollywood and I love show business. We have the finest artists and smartest businessmen right here. And, notwithstanding the sour intellectuals and disappointed artists who pooh-pooh our life and product, Hollywood has given the world some high-calibre entertainment. What's more, the industry will, one day, contribute something great and lasting to the arts because the moving picture is the medium of the people.

HOPPER

So what I have to say is not in the sour grapes tradition. It's an honest attempt to diagnose one of Hollywood's maor maladies and suggest something constructive.

At regular intervals the cry goes out from the movie capitol, "We need more leading men! There's a dearth of talent here! New Faces. We want people who can act. Pictures are starving for capable jeojle "

Hollywood howls, and does nothing about it. Talent scouts sour the country for picture prospects. Fine. Movie emissaries haunt Broadway theaters with an eagle eye. Great. Broadway has always been, always will be, our greatest source of talent. But what happens with the people they do pick? And what happens to the thousands who come here, unnoticed, with talent and no opportunity to give it an airing? You picture fans read only the success stories. Have you any idea of the great mass of fine talent that is idle in Hollywood alone? Still the cry continues for new faces, better talent, leading men and so forth. That's a haphazard state of affairs.

Hundreds of thousands of dollars are wasted yearly in giving contracts to people who are never given a chance to earn their money—for publicity in building up people of questionable or no ability whatever. Some of that money could be used to develop a system of discovering and training people here on the home grounds. To this end, I humbly suggest—no, not humbly—I blatantly suggest that they not only think about, but give, action to the establishment of a small theater, sponsored collectively by all movie companies, in which the people they have under contract and those who are potential movie actors can be given an opportunity to act in the theater before several audiences—develop their craft—and prove what they can do.

Impossible? A fantastic idea? All right, what it the first question asked by the intelligent young actor or actress who is not capable or fortunate enough to work steadily in pictures at the beginning?

Lucia Lull Portrays Cindy Lou in Boothe Satirical Comedy

Lucia Lull, that starry-eyed little actress from Alabama, seen at Olney for two weeks last summer, is looking for one guaranteed, patented, detachable Southern accent.

Right now she's using her own hominy-andgrits dialect as Cindy Lou Bethany in Clare Boothe's sparkling satire, "Kiss the Boys Goodbye," returning to the National Theater November 27.

"But after this show closes," she said, "I guess I'll be right back in the same old fix. I'll have to learn Yankee all over again."

And that is shore 'nuf sumpin,' as we say down on the plantation.

Miss Lull journeyed to New York about six years ago, fresh out of Gulf Park Junior College, in Gulfport, Miss.

The theater wasn't exactly new to Miss Lull—she'd done a movie called "Tongues of Flame" for a fire extinguisher company at the age of 12, and her mother had a circuit stock company—but, to play it safe, she went to dramatic school for two years.

No Parts for Drawl

Then came the heartbreak. New York producers just didn't have parts that fitted the Wetumpka, Ala., girl's devastating drawl.

Friends whispered confidentially that Southern accents were too much of a specialty; that she ought to talk "Yankee."

"Well, sir," she said, "I did just that. I got so I sounded more like Ashtabula than Alabama. Then I got a few parts in stock—things were really going fine."

Until, as Miss Lull will tell you without more than 5 seconds' hesitation, Broadway just wasn't Broadway any more. There wasn't a casting from Fourteenth street to Times Square.

"I was getting pretty discouraged," she confessed; "so I figured I'd just go home and rest up.

Herself Once Again

"And then when I stepped off the train in New York after my vacation, honey, I just naturally was a Southern girl again. I'd lost all that Yankee talk."

Then she heard that Brock Pemberton, "the sweetest man," was casting "Kiss the Boys Good-bye" a satire on Hollywood's search for a Scarlett O'Hara, for its second season.

"I walked right into his office, talked fast. He listened real spellbound. He called a Miss Boothe, the sweetest woman, and she listened, too."

In a flash Miss Lull was Cindy Lou, and as Cindy Lou she is starring in the road company of Miss Boothe's successful comedy. The accent won her first big part.

Pays Tribute to the Domestic Tyrant

The domestic tyrant is not the most popular of heroes, even if you grant him a heart of gold and place him against the nostalgic background of the far-away eighties, where picturesque American is rampant.

Being wise playwrights, Howard Lindsay and Russel Crouse have realized that fact, and in dramatizing Clarence Day's celebrated "Life With Father," they have done the one thing that could make their family dictator a sympathetic figure. They have seen to it that he never wins a battle. Always they have arranged for him to enter fuming and raging, a pretty picture of the dominant male on the rampage, and then they have permitted mother, with her innocent 1880 femininity, to vanquish him utterly, reducing him to the depths of defeat and confusion.

It was my misfortune to get around to but few of Mr. Day's original sketches, but it is my impression that they were less gentle and less sentimental than the play. I think, though, that in making the transfer from book to stage, the dramatists have done the wise thing. In this day in our theater we are feeling romantic about our national past, and we want that mood in a comedy that amounts to a bourgeois folktale of the period. Messrs. Lindsay and Crouse, by making father a vanquished and therefore sympathetic figure, have given us a most attractive one.

Suggests O'Neill

Although there are occasional dull stretches in "Life With Father," I think you will find it a winning and amusing play. There is something of the quality of O'Neill's "Ah, Wilderness" about it, although, thanks to the presence of father, there is a more tart manner to it. For the nominal head of the family, constantly overwhelmed by wife and children though he may be, is a vigorous and racy fellow, peppery and choleric, and, despite his unpleasant propensity for picking on servants, even rather valiant.

Although he can be reduced to the state of an emotional weakling in a moment by a woman's tears, he can put a domineering minister in his place and can hold out against the God of the formal religions with vigor and courage. You have the feeling that, while father may lose all his battles at home, he can win them pretty handily against outsiders, which is a more pleasant sight than if the opposite were the case.

The hero of the Lindsay-Crouse play is, in fact, quite a fellow in his way, and his adventures in the bosom of his family are curiously engaging.

Is Period Piece

One of the good things about "Life With Father" is that it is a period piece which doesn't go in too heavily for atmosphere.

Such works are usually overburdened with self-conscious references to celebrated figures, famous events and the usual local color of their period. As often as not the authors of this type of play are so filled with a passion for the quaintness of the naive age they are contemplating that they become embarrassingly condescending in their writing. It is not a pleasant sight to see a dramatist patronizing the era that he is so honoring by doing a play about it.

There is none of this in "Life With Father." The dramatists do not go in for an excess of atmosphere. They do not insist on telling you what a quaint period they are writing about. They do not bother to get as many historic names and events into their play as if they were dramatizing a chapter by Philip Guedalla. They merely establish the date of the play quietly and modestly and let it go at that. The effect is far more pleasant and credible.

Author Plays Part

Although Mr. Lindsay, the coauthor, plays Father humorously and attractively, I was ungracious enough in my first-night review to be vaguely dissatisfied by his performance.

It is not by any means a bad portrayal that he gives, and most of my colleagues thought it was wonderful. My only objection was that it was always so clearly an actor's performance. He never managed to my satisfaction to lose himself entirely in the role, to achieve that vital feat of seeming to be the character he was playing rather than to be acting it. Thus the illusion was never complete and Father was not made into quite the epic figure he should have become.

I thought Miss Dorothy Stickney was excellent as the mother, that Miss Teresa Wright was an attractive ingenue and that Mr. Lindsay's "damn" was perfectly uttered, but for me father was not quite perfectly played.

But "Life With Father" is one of the pleasant things of a remarkable dramatic season.

Louella O. Parsons'

Close-Ups and Long-Shots of the Motion Picture Scene

(Thanks to Rosalind Russell for writing my Sunday story this week. L. O. P.)

By Rosalind Russell.

Hollywood, Nov. 18.—The enormity of my cheek has just dawned upon me. Because I play the part of a girl reporter in "His Girl Friday," I interviewed a star reporter who is turning actress in earnest.

LOUELLA PARSONS

Mine wasn't an ordinary assignment, however. I interviewed the woman who wrote the first motion picture column, who has known intimately every celebrity in screen history; the reporter who has helped write the history of Hollywood while it happened.

Louella Parsons was writing about motion pictures before I ever learned a line.

Oddly, the interview was absurdly easy, not because of any facility on my part, but because the subject supplied all the answers, was kind and understanding and pulled me over every rough spot.

Even when I started brusquely by inquiring what her greatest ambition was, she took it calmly and had her answer ready, almost as though anticipating the query.

Louella Parsons has always cherished an ambition to become an actress. She herself claims that lack of talent stood in her way. When I scoffed at the suggestion, she claimed lack of memory of lines, that she was good for nothing but writing; then added, with a smile, that she was a very good cook.

Wondering how her ambition to be an actress fitted into a scheme of things which long ago destined her to be a writer, this reporter lived up to her idea of able reporting by asking. She told me that being a newspaper woman was the most fascinating profession in the world; that nothing could equal the thrill of obtaining a scoop.

This fabulous person never expected to "land" in Hollywood. In fact, she was sent to California to die. Fourteen years ago a prominent New York specialist pronounced her an incurable case. She was working then, as now, for William Randolph Hearst, and he told her to go to California.

"To me that was like going into exile," she remembers.

She went to Palm Springs, not the famous resort of today, but a straggling desert village, with but one telephone.

"When you phoned the whole town listened," she smiled. "For a while I was too sick to do anything, but finally made up my mind I wasn't going to die. The California sunshine made me well. My first interview was with John Galsworthy, who had made a trip to Palm Springs with his wife. I think that conversation with Mr. Galsworthy did as much as anything else toward increasing my will to live."

Thinking to catch Miss Parsons off guard I inquired why, when she was named a bridge expert by all Hollywood, her husband played so many of her hands.

"You've been talking to my daughter," she laughed. "I often write a column while playing bridge and many times I leave the table. The doctor takes over my cards—especially when they are bad."

The woman who today writes the important news of the motion picture industry broke into that industry by reading scenarios. Soon she was writing them, one a week, and did the scenario for the first Francis X. Bushman picture.

Once she almost lost her job because she paid Rupert Hughes the unheard-of price of $75 for a script.

By this time I was beginning to worry. I asked Miss Parsons, if she were doing the story, would she handle it differently.

"I wouldn't be as smart as you are," she answered graciously. I suspect that was to put me at my ease more than anything else. "You're very wise. You let me talk about myself, which is the secret of all good interviewers."

I had been curious about her forthcoming personal appearance tour, so I asked her about it.

"I laughed when they first talked to me about the idea," she admitted. "I am taking a group of promising young players with me, including Jane Wyman, June Preisser, little Joy Hodges, Arleen Whelan, Ronald Reagan and Susan Hayward. Each is going to do what he or she likes best."

On this tour Miss Parsons will dictate part of her daily column from the stage. She will also act as mistress of ceremonies and will choose the star of 1940, a forecast which, naturally, is being eagerly awaited by everyone in Hollywood.

Civic Theater To Launch New Season in Week

Wardman Park Theater Again Will House Five-Play Series

The Washington Civic Theater has completed negotiations with Wardman Park Theater for the 1939-1940 season, which begins with the Broadway play, "Merrily We Roll Along," on November 26 for a seven-day run.

Due to last-minute complications which were unforeseen it was not possible for the Civic players to take over the Belasco Theater for the season, as previously announced. However, rehearsals have been going on nightly for the past several weeks under the direction of the tireless director, Day Tuttle, whose enthusiasm for Washington amateur ability is boundless.

The annual membership campaign of the Civic Theater is under way, under the direction of Zerilda Ross Dillon, who has been with the theater for two years as executive secretary. Mrs. Dillon was also associated for several years with the famous Dallas Little Theater.

This year, for the first time, Washington Civic Theater will ask their audiences at the first two plays to ballot for their preferences as to plays to be presented on the last three dates of the season. The plays from which the public will make their selections are "Medicine Show," "Murder in the Cathedral," "St. Joan," "Dame Nature," "My Heart's in the Highlands," "The Gentle People," "Father Malachy's Miracle," "Rip Van Winkle," "Johnny Johnson," a revival; "Prologue to Glory," "Princess Turandot" and "The Insect Comedy."

Leading roles in "Merrily We Roll Along" will be played by Mimi Norton, as Julia Glenn; Richard Kreuzburg, Richard Niles; Frances Brunt, as Helen; Sarah Seegar as Althea Royce.

Of the large cast, approximately 50 per cent are newcomers to the Civic Theater. Among these are several of particular talent, according to Mr. Tuttle. Important roles are carried by Alan Schneider, Thomas Drake, Rebecca Rice, Ethel Kuter, Ted Projector, Rudolph Justice Watson, Yvonne Kushner, Harold Bromberg, Robert Langley, Morris Arkin, Marie Gordon, Milton Freedman, Minna Adams and Stanley La Coste.

Others with active parts in the nine-scened George S. Kaufman-Moss Hart play include Robert Caren, Constance Haug, John Pooley Wright, Elsie Lindquist, Oliver Horsfall, Doris McWhirt, Gloria Brandt, Joseph Bly, Joseph Brechner, Leslie Higbie, Ted Allison, Inez Bushner, Barbara Councillor, Betty Herron, Marge Kramer, Frances Green, Phyllis Frank, Margaret Seeley, Betty Leaf.

Theater's First Gentleman

Washington, that Mickey Rooney is a marvelously gifted youngster whose full capabilities never before have been revealed to the public.

Here is a kid not yet out of his 'teens who also writes songs, can play any instrument he picks up, dances with the best of them, sings and is a pretty elegant little actor, to boot. He does all of these things in "Babes in Arms." He not only does them, but does them well. The theater is born in him, just as it was in Mickey Moran, the character he assumes in the present picture. Mickey Rooney doesn't really come to life until he gets before an audience—whether it be an audience of director, assistant directors, grips and juicers or a more formal lot seated expectantly across the footlights.

This was demonstrated when I watched him and Judy "do their stuff" from backstage on that insufferably hot day of their visit last summer. When they hit those footlights, both were transfigured into the real spirit of the theater. They were oblivious to everything else but bowling over that overflow audience. Troupers born and bred.

I would like now to see them teamed in a stage musical comedy where the full measure of enthusiasm and the superlative abilities with which they have been endowed might be revealed under the impetus of a cheering crowd out front. They would gain an increased measure of effectiveness, just as Maurice Chevalier does, for instance, when seen "in the flesh," instead of encased in the aspic of the celluloids. One apprehends only a scant 75 per cent of the Chevalier personality from its shadow. That is equally true of Mickey and Judy.

Something Should Be Done About That Law

And that reminds me. Under the benign ministrations of the insufferable District Child Labor Law, Master Rooney and Miss Garland probably would be barred from the local stage, even were they cast in a living production, on the pretext that something abominable and irremediable was being done to their bodies and souls. If not Master Rooney, at least Miss Garland. It already has happened to her once.

This bizarre and indefensible statute has deprived Washington of a shameful number of youthful artists whose conditions of life are such as to preclude any harmful results from the pursuit of the profession for which they were born. It will continue to be so until what certainly must amount to majority conviction is able to make itself both articulate and effective in the country's legislative halls.

Perhaps there "ought to be a law," but the present child labor law assuredly is not it.

It's, "Where can I get some more training? How can I develop? Where will I get the opportunity to show them what I can really do?"

So actors are asking for a chance to develop themselves and producers are screaming for people with talent who know their business. Everyone wants the same thing and nobody does anything about it. What a way to run a billion dollar industry!

The immediate and simple answer is Broadway; that's hte place for a young actor to get his training. But it's just as tough to break into a New York theater as it is into pictures. Then there are the little theaters. Excellent places to work steadily and develop craftsmanship. But those little theaters don't offer a living and sooner or later the most talented of each year's crop find hteir way to Broadway or Hollywood.

So in the interest of developing better actors who will contribute to the making of finer pictures, Hollywood should solve the problem with its own facilities; and they are unlimited.

I mean a theater—subsidized by the studios, but completely autonomous—with one or two directors at the most whose job would be to do good plays with contract people who need experience, plus the many young actors who are without contracts and need a chance to show themselves.

Is Worth Trying

It's from years of studying audience reactions that our finest actors learned their craft. Our biggest stars tried to improve at each performance because no two audiences are the same. Where else but the stage is it possible to get this? And if you want to make better pictures with actors who have profund audience appeal, train them in a theater—where they can learn to appreciate their craft and earn their applause.

The idea is worth a two-year experiment, after careful planning with people who know their business.

And I have only touched the surface possibilities of such a move because I haven't time to write a book about it. Everything, including the money, is at our command to do this thing. Let's quit pawing the air and uttering loud cries of, "What'll we do?"

Thank heaven I've got that off my chest.

McCormick, who goes out to fight for China because he has honest admiration for their cause and because he has no economic future in his own land—so he goes out and returns as a ghost.

It is a play of ghosts, a play of little reality and therefore makes little more logic than such a drama as "Outward Bound," which told the story of a group of people who were dead and who were sailing on a ship without realizing they were dead.

Luther Adler, Frances Farmer and most of the others of the group theater cast overburden "Thunder Rock" with their stylized, affected performances. But McCormick, as the idealistic youngster who is thrust into a soldier of fortune rôle, and Morris Carnovsky, as an old New England shipping captain, willing to give advice to the lads below deck, give performances that help mightily to lift up Ardrey's drama.

Gadget Is 'Dupe' Of Television Set

There is nothing new under the sun, according to Tommy Plews, veteran Hollywood property man.

Fourteen years ago, Plews had a funny gadget made for the old picture, "The Last Man on Earth," starring Earle Fox. The affair was a box with a screen on it and numbered dials to control pictures which appeared on the screen. Everybody laughed at the machine because it seemed like a hair-brained idea.

Today, Plews had furnished a television receiving set for use in "Television Spy." The property man said it was an exact duplicate of the apparatus he had constructed years ago. And this one was right out of the television laboratory.

Atlas

Smiley Burnette, whose comedy has been a feature of many Gene Autrey "Westerns," will appear in person on the stage at the Atlas Theater for a four-day engagament, opening this afternoon.

With the comic will be a group of Hollywood cowboys. Another feature on the Atlas stage will be Lou Handman, composer of the popular "Baby Me," and his singing partner, Florrie Levere.

Wallace Berry and Chester Morris in "Thunder Afloat" will be the screen feature today, tomorrow and Tuesday. On the final day of Burnette's engagement there will be a double screen bill, "Of Human Bondage" and "Behind Prison Gates."

Gayety

Diane Rowland, "Society's Glamour Girl," in "Wine, Woman and Song" is the banner attraction opening at the Gayety Theater this afternoon. Others appearing in this week's burlesque production are Maxie Furman, leading comedian; Iloah, exotic dancer; Harry Evanson, comedian; Dorothy Darling, "the dimpled darling," and Herbie Barrish, one of burlesque's favorite fellows.

Modern Dance Deserves Consideration as Music

Both Arts Use Abstract Form and Emotional Content to Stimulate Varied Responses In Individual Beholders

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Many Washingtonians interested in the dance as a living art (and not as a jellied fixation of ballet traditions) will be wending their way tonight to the Dance Playhouse on Church street for the season's opening with the premiere of a ballet, "It's Hell on Women," with choreography by Evelyn Davis and music by Mary Howe. Since I was among those privileged to witness a pre-view of this production last spring, I can discuss here, in anticipation of the performance, some of the ideas which naturally arise from it. Perhaps I should say the principal idea, for I shall deal with the erroneous impression that in dancing art and in musical art "every picture must tell a story," and that every dance-composition and every piece of abstract music must convey a definite and circumscribed meaning which will be the same to every beholder. By the very nature of artistic creation, which has the purpose of stimulating varied responses, it is impossible that this should be true.

RAY C. B. BROWN.

It would save choreographers much cudgeling of brains, if they could call a composition simply "Dance No. 9," as a composer writes at the head of his score "Symphony No. 2." But we are not yet free from the bondage of romanticism, that exciting period when fancy ran riot and every work of art had to have a plot. It was romanticism that attached the misleading adjective "Moonlight" to Beethoven's C sharp minor piano sonata and enticed Chaikovski into the fatuous mistake of calling his sixth symphony the "Pathetique." It is the belated influence of romanticism that makes us still insist upon descriptive labels.

In the case of the ballet in which Miss Davis and Mrs. Howe have collaborated, the ideas were worked out and the patterns of dance and music fused before either of them had given any thought to a title. The ballet is in essence a satirical comment upon the antagonism between men and women, but the central idea gives rise to so many variations in the choreography that no title can contain them all. Yet a title there must be to provide spectators with a clue, and consultations were held among the dancers in the group and their friends. It is an open secret that the title finally chosen was humorously suggested by Dr. Hans Kindler.

Now all this bother over a specific name for a generalized theme would not have been necessary had we emancipated ourselves from the convention of descriptive tags. As long as the art of dancing (as distinguished from folk dancing) was confined to the formal ballet and attached to opera, it was expected to tell a story. But with the appearance of dancing as an independent art, the dancer is no longer a narrator and can devise patterns which are as abstract as the lines of a fugue. In other words, the contemporary dancer is starting just where the composer of music started—with pure form.

Pure form, however, has the power of stimulating emotion in the beholder, and that power is the vitalizing element in music and in the art-dance. A fugue, one of the most abstract musical forms, has an emotional content, because music is first, last and always, an emotional language. In fact, when we apply the word "abstract" to music we refer only to its mathematical basis and not to its power of suggestion, for music originated in emotion and cannot exist without it.

"Far from being an abstract art," says Constant Lambert, "music is as naturally emotional as painting is naturally representational. If we speak of Mozart as a pure composer, it is only in the sense that we speak of Renoir as a pure painter. But that does not mean for a moment that Mozart or Renoir believed in abstraction in art. Mozart's best music, as is well known, was found unpleasing by many of his contemporaries because of its intensely melancholy and romantic nature. Those present-day critics who see in Mozart nothing but a glorified craftsman making a concord of sweet sounds in a spirit of angelic detachment offer convincing proof of their complete insensitiveness to all save the purely stylistic aspects of music."

Whatever confusion exists in our arguments about abstract and expressive music arises from our failure to separate clearly the abstractness of mathematical form from the emotionalism clinging to it. Pure music is pure mathematics, but a composer can no more keep emotion out of a formal composition than a mathematician can think of an equation without also thinking of its application to a definite problem. An equation is a generalized formula which is applicable to special cases, and it is capable of as many "meanings" as there are cases to which it is applied. The "meaning" of a musical composition is different for every individual who hears it, while its mathematical formula remains the same to every observer.

What the contemporary art of the dances asks of us is to recognize this distinction between abstract form and emotional content. The choreographer uses abstract formulae of physical movement for the expression of emotional impulses, relying upon the fact that each gesture and movement stimulates a corresponding reflex in the spectator. We enjoy the dancer's art with the visual sense and we understand it with the kinesthetic sense. Therefore, we should not ask the choreographer to tell us beforehand with a title what the "meaning" of the dance is. It will have a different "meaning" for each of us while we are all watching the same moving patterns.

Menuhin Here Next Sunday

Yehudi Menuhin, famous young American violinist, will give a recital next Sunday afternoon in Constitution Hall under the management of Mrs. Dorothy Hodgkin Dorsey. His program consists of the Franck sonata for violin and piano, Bach's sonata in A minor for unaccompanied violin, Vieniavski's Concerto No. 1 in F sharp minor, and a concluding group of pieces by Kreisler, Nin, Debussy and Locatelli. He will be accompanied by Hendrik Endt.

This season Menuhin is using a new violin in alternation with the "Khevenhueller" Stradivarius which was presented to him when he was 12 years old by Henry Goldman, of New York. This latest acquisition to his collection, the "Russian" Guarnerius, dated 1742, was given to him last spring by his wife, the former Nola Nicholas, of Melbourne.

N. Y. Orchestra Gives Concert Here Wednesday

Barbirolli to Lead Philharmonic in Constitution Hall

Under the direction of John Barbirolli, the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra will give a concert on Wednesday evening in Constitution Hall, making its first appearance in Washington for nine years. The program consists of Berlioz's "Roman Carnival" overture, Elgar's "Introduction and Allegro" for strings, Op. 47; Jaromir Weinberger's new variations on "Under the Spreading Chestnut Tree" and the fourth symphony of Brahms.

The New York Philharmonic Orchestra, which absorbed the New York Symphony Orchestra in 1928, is the oldest orchestra in the United States and the third oldest in the world. Its first concert was given December 7, 1842, in the Apollo Rooms, and it boasts an unbroken record of performances since that date. There were 63 members in the orchestra when it was founded, and today there are 104.

There were numerous conductors during the first half century of the orchestra's existence. From 1855 to 1876 Hill, Timm, Etienne, Alpers, Boucher, Loder, Wiegers, Eisfeld, Maratzek and Bergmann wielded the baton. In the thirty-fifth season George Matzka and Leopold Damrosch; in the thirty-eighth, Theodore Thomas. Adolph Neuendorff conducted during the season 1879-80 and continued until 1882,, when he was succeeded by Anton Seidl.

Following Seidl were Emil Paur, Walter Damrosch, Victor Herbert, Edouard Colonne, Felix Weingartner, Richard Strauss, Willem Mengelberg, Fritz Steinbach and Josef Stranski. The present conductor, John Barbirolli, has held the position since the fall of 1936.

Quartet Schedules Annapolis Series

A series of Sunday afternoon concerts and recitals is being offered by the Music Club of St. John's College in Annapolis. The first concert takes place today and is being given by the String Quartet of the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra (Mishel Piastro, Imre Pogany, Zoltan Kurthy and Joseph Schuster).

Stokowski to Introduce Own Transcriptions

Philadelphia Conductor To Lead Orchestra Here November 28

Leopold Stokowski will conduct the Philadelphia Orchestra in its second Washington concert of the season on Tuesday eveniong, November 28, in Constitution Hall. In the program he has included three of his own transcriptions: Bach's great organ Passacaglia, Debussey's piano piece, "Claire de Lune," and Musorgski's piano suite, "Pictures at an Exhibition." Concerning the last work, the transcriber says:

"The sketches which Musorgski wrote for piano are among his greatest creations. Some have regarded him as a talented amateur but not a born musician. The truth is that he was so original that he cannot be measured by conventional standards. Every melodic contour, every rhythm, every harmonic sequence in these sketches show him to have been a profound musician who created his own language. The music is the quintessence of the Slavic spirit. He sings of the old, primitive Russia with modern freedom of tonal expression.

"In my transcription of this suite for orchestra I have aimed to preserve this Slavic character. In parts this music has a kind of humor wholly personal to Musorgski; in other parts the expression is by turns fantastic, grotesque, sinister, terrifying, mystical and ecstatic. I have tried to paint these changing moods in the rich and powerfully contrasting colors of the modern orchestra."

Musorgski composed the suite in 1874 in affectionate remembrance of his friend, Victor Hartmann, architect and water-color painter. Hartmann died suddenly, and a memorial exhibit of his paintings was arranged by a circle of his intimates. Musorgski's music depicts the composer walking around the room, pausing before certain paintings and describing them. Previously to Stokowski's arrangement, the suite has been orchestrated by Tushmalov, Wood, Leonardi, Ravel and Cailliet.

The program opens with Handel's D minor overture and includes Mozart's G minor symphony. Reservations for the concert can be made at the box office in Jordan's music store, 1239 G street. The remaining concerts to be given this season by the Philadelphians will be conducted by Eugene Ormandy on January 2 (Yehudi Menuhin, soloist), February 27 (Arthur Rubenstein, soloist), and April 2 (soloist to be announced).

Symphony to Play Work of D. C. Composer

LaSalle Spier's 'Symphonic Visions' on This Afternoon's Program

This afternoon's concert by the National Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Hans Kindler, in Constitution Hall at 4 o'clock features the premiere of "Symphonic Visions," by the resident composer, LaSalle Spier, and the first appearance here as orchestral soloist of Nino Martini, tenor of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

"Symphonic Visions" was begun by Mr. Spier in June of 1938 and completed last January. The work has seven movements sub-titled: Elevato, Doloroso, Funerale, Resvegliato, Sereno and Jubiloso. Of them the composer says: "The visions here depicted are not intended to be 'supernatural' in character, but are visions of life such as could come to anyone—visions of high purpose, frustration, grief, renewed power, serenity and joy."

The composition is cyclical in structure, as every part of it is evolved from the theme which occurs at the beginning of the first movement. This theme, and subdivisions of it, are used in divers ways, singly or in combination, throughout the work. This homogeneity of thematic material is not unduly apparent, however, and is adopted only to give the work structural unity. The composer's objective was the achievement of contrasting emotional moods through the use of identical material.

The work is scored for piccolo, two bassoons, four horns, two trumpets, three trombones, tuba, celeste, harp, piano, tympani, percussion (including small drum, tam-tam, tambourine, triangle and tubular bells) and the usual strings.

LaSalle Spier is a native of Washington. He studied composition with Joseph Henius (a pupil of Dvorak) in New York and with Richard Burmeister in Berlin. As a composer he has attained a wide reputation. His "Impressions of the Bowery" was given its premiere by the National Symphony several years ago. Other of his orchestral works have been played by the Rochester Civic Orchestra and the United States Navy Band Orchestra. His violin sonata was performed by Sylvia Lent in a New York recital.

Other orchestral music programmed for this afternoon includes Dvorak's "Carnival Overture" and a Cassation in M major by Mozart. Nino Martini will be accompanied by the orchestra in two arias: "Una furtiva lagrima," from "L'Elisir d'Amore" and "Che gelida manina," from "La Boheme."

With Migueal Sandoval as piano accompanist, Martini will also sing Rachmaninoff's "Floods of Spring," Campbell-Tipton's "A Spirit-Flower," Maria Grever's "Bolero" and Serrano's "El trust de los tenorios."

On Tuesday afternoon at 2:30 the first students' program (which was presented last Friday in Western High School) will be repeated in Roosevelt High School. Other presentations of the program are scheduled for Tuesday, November 28, in Anacostia High School; Wednesday, November 29, in Woodrow Wilson High School, and December 1 in McKinley High School. Dr. Kindler's them is "Music: A Language" and the illustrations have been selected from Weber, Berlioz, Grieg, Debussy, Chaikovski, Mendelssohn, Rossini, MacDowell and Salzedo.

Plan Development Of Young Talent

At a recent meeting of the directors of the D. C. Federation of Music Clubs it was decided to place more emphasis upon the development of young musicians up to the age of 18 years. Each spring a competitive festival is held, and those who enroll and prepare the required selections are examined individually by a board of adjudicators and given ratings. Certificates which are issued by the National Federation, are valuable for notation on the semester reports of high-school students who are entitled to receive credits for work done with private teachers.

In order to enjoy the benefits of these competitions, participants must be members of a junior club of the Federation. There are already 60 junior clubs with a total of 1,400 members. Each of these is headed by a counselor, who can obtain literature and application blanks from Virginia Lewis Ring, 8 Rosemary Lane, Chevy Chase, Md.

SWING SESSIONS

With BILL GOTTLIEB.

The proof of the pudding is in the number of people making a grab for it. Any question as to the lusciousness of the waxen pudding of the phonograph record industry has long been dissipated by the hordes of dealers, performers and manufacturers trampling over each other to get a crust, if not the plum, of the delicacy.

Biggest addition to the field since the advent of 5-year-old Decca is the new U. S. Record Corporation, selling under the Varsity (35 cents) and Royale (75 cents and $1) labels. Since the birth of Decca, Victor has added the Bluebird line and American-Columbia-Brunswick-Vocalion has reorganized some half-dozen times. But U. S. Record is the first completely new, first-rank company to break into the heretofore big three.

The company's chief problem seems to be talent: Circulars from the U. S. Record offices list Glenn Miller among its stars. A personal letter from Clinton's publicity man says that Larry, together with Tommy Dorsey, will also join the new company. The catch is that all three are under freshly signed, long-term contracts with Victor. Somehow Miller, and possibly others, have concurrent contracts with the two companies. Only a court fight should definitely settle the differences.

Though the largest, U. S. Records is by no means the only new entry among those seeking a share of the booming record business. At least six concerns have been formed that cater to hot jazz connoisseurs, alone. Blue Note, Hot Record Society, Collectors Item, United Hot Club and Commodore discs are made expressly for the small but ardent group of discriminating hot discophiles.

Chamber music and other more scholarly forms of "serious" music constitute the output of companies like Musicraft, Gamut and Schirmer while Liberty and Gramaphone labels mark "smart" presentations by Bea Lille, Alec Templeton and the like. Even labor is represented by General Record Corporation and subsidiaries like Tac and Labor Stage brands. There is actually a company, United, devoted to skating-rink records.

The expanding record pudding has evidently grown fast enough to support such a large assemblage of diners. Record sales have increased over 600 per cent since 1933. Our current yearly figure of over 60,000,000 unit sales (worth $40,000,000) is still below the hundred million mark set in 1921, but even that point should be surpassed in four or five years.

In the early 20's, Caruso made $3,000,000 from the record public. High honors now probably go to Artie Shaw, who gets $100,000 this year for 50 records. No. 1 seller Bing Crosby, with a minimum of orchestral expenses, probably nets even more.

Radio, which almost killed records 15 years ago, is most responsible for records' revival. Radio educated the public to music and made it seek "the music it wants, when it wants it." Now records are, possibly, more important than radio in "making" a popular band.

Record Reviews

The New Royale, Varsity Labels: Until the big guns are safely inside its camp, U. S. Record's most promising standard bearer is the improving Van Alexander Band, though its first effort, "Honestly" and "Scatterbrain," is only so-so . . . Hot collectors will like best the honest-to-goodness jazz of "Jess Stay" and "Noni," by Jess Stacy and a recording band made up of Bob Crosby men . . . Johnny Green does a pretty on "All the Things You Are," from the new show, "Very Warm for May" . . . If double meaning songs are sung by the right people, they're called sophisticated instead of vulgar. Very sophisticated is Johnny Messner's orchestra when it finally waxes "She Had to Go and Lose It at the Astor."

Righteous Swing: Prize of the week is four solos by the one woman instrumentalist in swing who is the equal of any man—Mary Lou Williams. Mary Lou is pianist, arranger and spark of the Andy Kirk band. With easy going sureness, she puts out brilliant versions of old standards: "The Rocks," "The Pearls," "Mr. Freddie Blues" and "Sweet Petunia" . . . Orchestral honors easily go to Duke Ellington's most successful wing, Johnny Hodges orchestra, on "Good Gal Blues" and "Savoy Strut."

Two "chamber" groups score—Benny Goodman's new sextet on "Rose Room" and "Flying Home" and Al Duffy's Four on "Funiculi Funicula" and "La Spagnola." Especially impressive is Charlie Christian's electric guitar on the Goodman sides and Duffy's hot fiddle . . . Not exactly swing; but good enough to rate the "righteous" tag are two colorful, unorthodox Ray Noble sides, "Iriquois" and "Comanche War Dance," follow-ups on his "Cherokee." Brilliant scoring by Noble.

Popular Swing and Sweet: If you haven't gotten around to it yet, catch "South of the Border," by Horace Heidt and by Tony Martin . . . Few orchestras can put over specialties with the entertaining, lively touch of Frankie Masters. Hear his "The Key to My Heart" and you'll get what I mean. Nice overlapping brass work, too, in the tradition of Richard Himbers pyramiding rhythm.

Serkin and Busch Make Record Of Brahms' Piano Quintet

By Jay Walz.

Victor representatives tell us they had some trouble getting the new recording of Brahms' Piano Quintet ready for release. They had to bring it from England and because of the war there were delays. But the results are worth it.

Album M-607, five large discs, is the set all admirers of Rudolf Serkin and Adolf Busch must have been waiting for—because, it seems to us, these artists were made for the Brahms composition. Especially Serkin. I have never heard him in a part so suited to him. The piano role in the Quintet requires drive, stamina and drama, and, in the Andante, a fine sense of the lyrical, all of which Serkin has in abundance. Certainly it is good to find the supercharged Serkin with a job that requires him to give all he has to give.

Of course, this isn't a one-man show. There are fireworks for Mr. Busch, the violinist and leader of the string quartet, and other members of the ensemble.

The song book of the month is a Lily Pons album, which Victor presents in a handsome color wrapper and all the superlatives of a feature set, "Lily Pons in Song" (Album M-599, one large and three small discs) is just the thing for Miss Pons' thousands of admirers. It presents her in 10 songs, almost all of which said admirers now associate with the talented coloratura's name—"La Capinera" by Benedict, "Les Filles de Cadix" by Delibes, "Villanelle" by Eva Dell'Acqua, "Le Beau Danube Bleu." These, and other songs in the album Miss Pons sings very well. She was in top form when she recorded them. If, however, you happen to be not of coloratura sympathies, this album is not for you. Miss Pons is a coloratura from start to finish, and doesn't pull any trills or high notes. In fact, as you probably know, she dotes on them.

Miss Pons is accompanied in several of the songs by Andre Kostelanetz's orchestra. The more lyrical songs have the support of her able assistant at the piano, Frank La Forge. Both accompaniments are well, and effectively, done. Miss Frances Blaisdell is flute obbligatist, and did a thorough job of it, but she didn't, I believe, get an even break with Miss Pons on the microphones.

In addition to the songs named above, the album contains "Green" (No. 5 from "Ariettes Oubliees") and "Mandoline" by Debussy, "A des Oiseaux" by Hue, "Une Tabatiere a Musique" by Liadow, "Comment Disaient-ils?" by Liszt, "Les Roses d'Ispahan" by Faure. There isn't so much there for song collectors. It's definitely a set for Pons fans.

Corcoran Shows Work by John Sloan

Exhibit Coincides With One Now Open in New York

By Jane Watson.

The Corcoran Gallery's exhibition of drawings and lithographs by John Sloan is particularly timely owing to the recent publication of his book, "Gist of Art," which contains excerpts from his teachings, his views on art in general and his own works in particular. It also happens to coincide with a mammoth display of Sloan's paintings in the galleries of John Wanamaker's store in New York.

The Corcoran exhibition is small, but, except for the conspicuous absence of his more experimental studies of the last decade, it offers a fairly rounded view of his work. There is included, for instance, one of this earliest drawings, "A Ball at the Academy," a brilliant exercise that looks as if it did not belong in the show at all, for it is Oriental in feeling and Toulouse-Lautrec in style. Also shown are "After the Duel" and "Man Dancing," drawings made in 1904 when Sloan was doing book illustrations. The presence here of a drawing of Robert Henri, his teacher and closest friend, seems especially suitable, since Henri's full-length portrait of the artist is in the gallery upstairs, a recent gift to the Corcoran from Mr. and Mrs. Sloan.

Sense of Humor

Sloan's sense of humor is to the fore in "Amateur Lithographers," in which two agitated artists wrestle with the mechanics of print-making; in "Gold Fish," in which the spectators resemble the inhabitants of the tank into which they are peering, and, more sardonically, in "Orango-Tango," which ranks in satire along with Forain, Daumier, Grosz and all the others who have ridiculed the human race.

But stronger than Sloan's sense of humor or satire is his feeling for humanity. It is his homely pictures of life along the sidewalks of New York that have endeared him to his generation, and will doubtless endear him to many more. When he made these pictures of Manhattan life, it was not fashionable to do so, as it is today. It is pretty hard to believe that once such subjects as are depicted in the prints, "Roofs, Saturday Afternoon," "Shine, Washington Square," "Sixth Avenue and Thirtieth Street," or "Sunday, Drying Their Hair," were greeted with derision and disdain. In those days artists (Sloan was an exception) went abroad to study and returned with their heads and their portfolios full of the glories of Paris and of Rome.

The exhibition continues at the Corcoran until the end of the month. Incidentally, on leaving the gallery which contains the drawings and lithographs the visitor will find in the adjoining room three etchings by John Sloan that are part of the permanent collection of the gallery. Upstairs is his famous oil, "Yeats at Petitpas," and at the Phillips Memorial Gallery not far away hangs one of his finest paintings, "In the Wake of the Ferry." But in some respects, in seeing the work of John Sloan in black and white, one sees him at his best. Color is not his strong point, and the prints and drawings have so much vitality that one does not feel the lack of color. Rather, the imagination is stimulated to provide its own.

Unconscious Art

There will be an exhibition of unconscious drawings and paintings at the Little Gallery, 3204 O street northwest, for two weeks, beginning today. These paintings and drawings are the originals of the illustrations in "The Inner World of Man," by Frances C. Wickes, with certain additions, and are the first thing of this kind to be shown in Washington.

Mrs. Wickes, who has worked with Dr. C. C. Jung in Zurich, is the author also of "The Inner World of Childhood." She has been practicing analytic psychology for many years in New York and will be in Washington for the opening of the exhibition.

Treasury of American Prints

"A TREASURY OF AMERICAN PRINTS," a selection of one hundred etchings and lithographs by the foremost living American artists, edited by Thomas Craven. (Simon & Schuster, New York, price $3.95.)

A hundred etchings and lithographs by contemporary artists have been selected and published together in a recent volume, "A Treasury of American Prints." Thomas Craven, author of "Men of Art" and "Modern Art," has made the choices, written the introduction, and has supplied accompanying brief texts for each print. This has been a busy season for Mr. Craven, as his "Masterpieces of Art," a similarly compiled volume covering seven centuries of the history of painting, has also just appeared.

While the reproductions of the latter book are in full color, the anthology of prints is kept entirely to the medium of black and white. It may be said that the quality of the reproductions of the prints is more successful than, on the whole, are the color illustrations in Mr. Craven's "Masterpieces of Art." Comparison with certain of the paintings has shown surprising discrepancies in these color plates. The method of printing by Aquatone which was employed for the black and whites has proved to be excellent. The prints are faithfully reproduced, and have the appearance in every way of the original work of the artists. Naturally, the difficulties of reproducing color are greater than those encountered in black and white. Then, too, the print, because of the very nature of what it is—a picture made to be copied—lends itself better to the processes of reproduction. Yet there are pitfalls, too, in the making of black and white plates, but in this book these have been splendidly surmounted.

The binding and the format of the volume have been so arranged that individual prints may be detached. This, in itself, is a good idea and should add to the value of the book, yet it has also involved the publishers in one unfortunate mistake. The comment to each picture is printed on the reverse side of the page, presumably so that text and print will remain together. But in the reading of the book the effect is disturbing and in several instances really comical.

"It cannot be denied," writes Mr. Craven, "that an American style in art has definitely emerged . . . and it is not a patriotic exaggeration to say that our print-makers are the best in the world." This is a very sweeping statement, and would seem to contain a certain amount of wishful thinking. Mr. Craven continues his thought and speaks of the development of the American scene as being founded by a small group of artists whom he names. In his selection of the prints for his review of contemporary graphic art he has featured the work of these men—as many as five or six pages being devoted to each one. It has been Mr. Craven's apparent intent to drive home his point of their leadership by favoring their work above all the others. It is questionable whether this is a good plan of exposition. This book of prints could have considerably widened its scope, and presented a perhaps less biased opinion, had its choices been more democratically proportioned. Had all the artists been limited to the same number of plates there would have been a less obvious insistence on a definite emphasis. ALICE GRAEME.

GeorgetownGalleries Show Paintings By F. A. Counsel

The Georgetown Galleries are showing an exhibition of water colors by Fredrique Alan Counsel, through December 1. Mr. Counsel is a young American painter born and reared in the mountainous countryside of western Pennsylvania, an environment of which has had great influence on his work. At Pennsylvania's School of Industrial Art he studied with Gertrude Schell and John J. Dull, later he studied at the Academy of Fine Arts in Philadelphia.

Mr. Counsel's works have been exhibited throughout the eastern half of the United United States as well as in England, where in a competition he won first prize for landscape at Long Morsley Tower, Long Horsley, in 1938. Other prizes and honors include Popular Award for best portrait at the Pittsburgh Allied Artists Show, 1938.

Junior League Shows Water Colors By M. E. Partridge

The Junior League of Washington is presenting an exhibition of Mary Elizabeth Partridge's water colors at the league gallery, 2001 Mass. Ave., from November 26 through December 8. The pictures will be on view from 1:30 to 5 each day.

Mrs. Partridge is no newcomer to the Washington art world having already shown her work at Studio House and Phillips Gallery and in other exhibitions here and in Philadelphia. It has been well received by critics and public. She recently has been invited to send some of her things to New York to be shown there.

Phillips Art Gallery Shows New Exhibitions

John Gernand Has One-Man Show Of Recent Work

By Alice Graeme

The Phillips Gallery is now showing in the print rooms a one-man exhibition of water colors and oils by John Garnand. The work of this young Washington artist is well known here and has been frequently shown in this city in various group exhibitions.

He had another one-man show, also at the Phillips Gallery about a year and a half ago.

Mr. Gernand has been working in oils for the most part, and the present group of water colors in the exhibition is a new departure for him. These papers were all done last summer at Cooperstown, N. Y., and show a considerable faculty in the handling of the medium's technique. Mr. Gernand's individual style has always been imaginative and poetic. His color range is low keyed, and soft and his subjects are far less stressed than is his interest in pattern and presentation of a certain mood. His approach is original and his pictures often have an ethereal and charming quality. Yet his painting has always lacked robustness and needed more cohesion and sense of reality. As he himself says he had come to feel that his work was perhaps too "tenuous."

In the present group of water colors this artist has made great advancement, and has strengthened his style and given much more solidity to his work. The discipline of turning out a series of water colors has worked as a kind of release from his perhaps too moody oils. These papers have a sparkle and a life which he has seldom achieved before. Without lose of imagination, they seem closer to the world about us.

Oils Also Shown

The "Lakeshore," with three figures in the foreground, and "The Lake Through the Trees" are particularly interesting. In the latter, the forms have a certain abstractness and suggest some of the work of Arthur Dove. The color in both these papers, as in most of the others, is clearer and brighter than that which Mr. Gernand generally employs. A veridian green adds brilliance, and the use of a little Chinese white has given more substance to the papers.

The oils included in this exhibition are more in the style in which Mr. Gernand has been working for the past few years, with the exception of "The Picnic," one of the few canvases which he painted last summer. Mr. Gernand has seldom worked with figures, but in his recent studies he has wanted to include them. The main motif in the composition of the "Picnic" is a group of three young people, composed in a quiet design. Such details as the orange tiger lilies growing against a rock are good, and the whole spotting of the color is well handled. This canvas seems one of Mr. Gernand's best to date.

In addition to the special showing of John Gernand's work the Phillips Gallery has arranged two other rooms with new hangings. A group of oils by Louis Elshemius is shown in one room, and a small invited exhibition of American contemporary artists is to be seen in another. The gallery owns a number of oils by Elshemius, and has lately acquired three new canvases by this artist: "Banks at Newberg," "Hudson at West Point" and "Kingsbridge." Since the recent publication of "He Sat Among the Ashes," William Schack's book on the veteran American painter, there has been renewed interest in this now crippled and disabled old artist. The recognition of his work was long in coming over a period of many years, but gradually, at the very twilight of his life, the world seems to be coming to his door.

Even in as small an exhibition as the present group at the Phillips the uneven quality of his work is apparent. Some of the landscapes, such as the small "Banks at Newberg," painted as early as the '90s, has much charm; the "Harbor by Moonlight," though perhaps crude in technique, has force, and fine passages. But in such a wild scene as the landscape of 1917, with a moon and a primitive drawing of a man in a boat, there is much that seems plain bad painting.

In the group of American artists it is interesting to find the work of the Soyer brothers, of Moses and of Raphael, who won an award at the Carnegie International this year. The "Two Men" of Joseph Hirsch has also been loaned, and there is the canvas by the Minnesota painter, Walter Kuhlman, which the gallery acquired last summer from the exhibition of American art at the World's Fair. Other canvases in the group are by Louis Donato, Hobson Pittman and Marsden Hartley.

U. S. Navy Ship Designers Study Performance of Foreign Fleets in Battle

The United States Navy is studying, from the sidelines, the performance of foreign battleships, cruisers and others ships of war in sea conflicts of the European war. Especially watched is the German pocket-battleship "Deutschland" (far right), which combines features of the cruiser and battleship. America's Navy command must decide if such a ship is effective, and, therefore, a design to be considered in the new shipbuilding program. If the answer is negative there will be more cruiser launchings like that shown on the right: a $15,000,000 cruiser slides down the ways at the Brooklyn Navy Yard. Above, a lighter type of cruiser, the "Concord", shown leaving New York Harbor recently

Changes May Result From War Abroad

'We're in No Hurry,' Says Edison Discussing Plans for Building New Vessels

By John G. Norris.

New types of naval vessels and extensive modification of the design of present classes may result from the war now underway in Europe.

How much the world's navies will be affected remains for the future to decide, from the acid test of a long war and the lessons digested by trained experts. Already, however, it may be said with assurance that the effect of the conflict has been felt by America's ship designers.

This was revealed by Acting Secretary of the Navy Charles Edison this week in announcing that the construction of two cruisers of the current year's building program was being held up for the time being to permit a thorough study of what has happened so far abroad.

"We're in no hurry," Edison told his press conference. "We might learn something in the meantime studying new designs in the light of developments overseas."

"Pocket" Ships Studied

His statement was widely interpreted as meaning the Navy is considering building a counterpart of the German "pocket" battleships Deutschland, Admiral Scheer and Admiral Graf Spee, in place of the two 8,000-ton light cruisers Cleveland and Columbia, the plans for which are still under study.

These are light ships carrying heavy guns and powerful engines, capable of outrunning all battleships but the latest craft and outfighting any ships less than dreadnaught caliber. They were built when Germany was still abiding by the Versailles Treaty, which limited her to ships of 10,000 tons or less.

Into this weight limitation the Reich shipbuilders put a maximum of fighting characteristics. Electric welding was used in the hulls instead of rivets and every weight-saving trick possible used. As a result the vessels carry six 11-inch guns, eight 5.9 inch guns, eight torpedo tubes, two airplane and antiaircraft batteries.

American ships of comparable size carry 6 and 8-inch guns and would be no match for the German craft in a ship-to-ship fight. Our battleships, armed with 14 and 16-inch guns, could, in a pitched battle, of course, blast the "pocket" craft from the sea.

Deutschland Watched

Two of the German craft are supposed to be roaming the seven seas, hunting down Allied commerce ships. The Deutschland, it will be recalled, was reported to have had the American City of Flint in convoy during its odyssey through the North Atlantic and Arctic. Only a squadron of British ships or the Hood or Nelson—Britain's fast heavily gunned battle cruisers were considered able to attack the ship.

But these advantages of the "pocket" battleship do not mean that the world's admiralities are worried about the new type and are rushing similar ships to combat it. On the contrary, they have weaknesses. It is significant that they have been in existence for several years and none of the world powers has built a counterpart.

"The Deutschland hasn't shown much as yet," Edison declared, a sentiment reflecting the views of shipbuilders everywhere.

'Hybrid' Ships Mistake

From long experience, naval men have concluded that "hybrid" ships are a mistake. Shipbuilding over the centuries has evolved certain distinct types of warships—the heavy "line-o'-battle" craft, lighter supporting ships, commerce raiders, etc. This was as true in the days of heavy frigates and sloops as today. Build the best battleships, the best cruisers, the best aircraft carriers, that can be designed and you will have the best fleet, the experts say. Try to combine two or three types in one ship, and you haven't either a good battleship, cruiser or carrier.

"A jack-of-all-trades is the master of none," is the way Edison and his admirals sum up the situation. The Navy chief declares:

"We believe in the types of ships evolved over a long period and don't want to forfeit years of experience for meager developments over there," the Navy chief declared, but adds that the high command thinks "better types are possible."

Navy Warfare Watched

With this attitude, the Navy General Board and other experts are approaching the problem of the two new cruisers and the whole future building program. Watch closely what is transpiring abroad, consider it in the light of experience and make plans accordingly. War is the only true laboratory for naval development. More was learned in a few hours at the Battle of Jutland than in years of maneuvers and peace-time tests.

What were the exact circumstances surrounding the sinking of the British battleship Royal Oak? How did her armor and "blisters"—outer "skins" of steel applied at the water-line—compare with those of our battleships? How much damage have German bombing planes done in their raids on the British fleet? These are the questions America's designers want to know before going ahead with new types of warships.

Whether or not radically different types of ships result from the lessons learned from the war, history shows that all previous conflicts have changed the course of ship-designing, to a greater or lesser degree.

History's Lessons Valued

The American Civil War brought forward the monitors, which brought on the change from wooden to steel ships. Defensively, the war proved the efficacy of under-water mine and forced navies to build and operate with a weather-eye to the hidden weapons. The World War threw doubt on the worth of fast, lightly protected battle-cruisers, and proved the submarine as a vital factor of sea power.

So far nothing has happened to raise a question in the minds of the Navy high command as to the place of the battleships in American defense plans. Neither the submarine nor the airplane has threatened their status as the "backbone of the fleet," they declare.

Another factor in the thoroughgoing review the Navy is giving its construction plans is the removal of all treaty limits. For when the world's naval powers failed at London in 1936 to continue quantitative limitation of fleets to keep the principle of arms limitation alive, qualitative bounds were agreed upon.

Limitations Decided Upon

The United States, Great Britain, France and Italy resolved not to build battleships above 35,000 tons, aircraft carriers larger than 23,000 tons, cruisers above 8,000 tons carrying guns bigger than 6.1-inch, destroyers above 3,000 tons or submarines more than 2,000 tons.

Later when Japan refused to sign the treaty and word leaked out that she was building battleships larger than 35,000 tons, the treaty signatories took advantage of escape clauses in the documents and Britain and the United States, at least, laid down comparable craft. The other limits held, however, until the outbreak of the war.

This week it was announced that all limits are now off as far as the United States is concerned, following similar action by Britain and France. As the result, our ship-designers may now consider future designs without reference to treaty restrictions.

Smaller Carriers Desired

In all categories except cruisers, the action is not of great immediate importance. The best present naval thought is that carriers of less than 23,000 tons are more desirable than larger craft. Similarly, the United States is now building destroyers and submarines well below treaty limits, the former being of 1,500 and 1,850 tons, and the U-boats of 1,450 tons or less.

As to cruisers, however, larger and more heavily armed units may be ordered, even should designers reject the Deutschland or something like it. Some naval officers feel the United States, having none too many naval bases, should have a larger number of the big cruisers, with holds sufficiently spacious to carry great quantities of fuel oil. It will be recalled that a limitation on big cruisers adopted at the 1930 London naval conference brought on the famous Senate battle over the "6s and 8s"—which was settled by the United States accepting a restriction on the number of 10,000-ton vessels carrying 8-inch guns and proceeding with the construction of 6-inch gun vessels.

4 Types of Cruisers

Today the American Navy has four types of cruisers, built or building. There are the aforementioned 8-inch gun, 10,000-ton class, and three classes carrying 6-inch guns, of 6,000, 7,500 and 10,000 tons displacement.

The Cleveland and Columbia were to have been the pro-type of a new 6-inch gun 8,000-ton class. Now, something entirely different may come out of the general board's studies.

Removal of limits on the gun-size of lighter ships may also bring changes. Future programs may possibily see a more heavily armed destroyer, perhaps carrying 7-inch guns, a vessel that as a commerce raider would dominate any sea area that did not include an enemy cruiser. Predictions, however, at this stage are decidely unwise.

One forecast, however, that might be made, with the odds at least leaning that way, are that proposals for "hybrid" ships like a flying deck cruiser—a combination of cruiser and aircraft carrier—or a combination dreadnaught and scout cruisers such as the Deutschland, will not be accepted by the American Navy. The high command will insist on a fleet second to none, composed of the best individual ships that American brains and money can produce.

D. C. Organized Reserves Get New Instructor; Meet Maj. George J. Engelthaler

In 20 Years He Has Seen Service in All Parts of United States

An officer of wide experience has been transferred to Washington to become instructor for infantry units of the Organized Reserve. He is Maj. George J. Engelthaler, who started his career in the infantry school at Langres, France, in 1918 and has had posts in all parts of the United States, including Alaska, for the past 20 years.

Maj. Engelthaler succeeds Col. D. B. Crafton, who will leave this week for his new station, to take charge of all civilian activities of the Ninth Corps, at The Presidio, San Francisco.

The new instructor's job will be to take over tutelage of the 160th Infantry Brigade, the 320th Infantry Regiment and the Thirteenth and Eightieth Military Police companies. He comes directly from the staff of the Fourteenth Infantry Brigade, at Fort Snelling, Minn., and is a graduate of the Fort Benning Infantry School and also the Army Tank Schools.

Maj. Engelthaler, after serving in France in the Thirty-fifth and Twenty-seventh Divisions, has been stationed successively with the Fifty-fourth Infantry at Camp Grant, Ill.; the Second at Fort Brady, Mich.; the Sixth Tank Company at Camp Custer, Mich.; the Seventh Infantry in Alaska; spent six years as instructor in the R. O. T. C. at Calumet Junior College, and the last two years with the Third Infantry at Fort Snelling.

Col. Earl Wentworth Thomson, commanding officer of the 916th Coast Artillery, who in civil life is professor of physics at the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, addressed informally, a group of Coast Artillery reserve officers on the training of the various branches of the Army. Col. Thomson placed great stress on the shortcomings of the National Guard and the Organized Reserve as observed by him during the field training of these units during the past year. Additional field training for all National Guard units is expected to correct these faults and instructors of organized reserve units are coordinating their training schedules with the same purpose in mind.

Maj. George B. DuBois, commanding the second battalion of the 376th Engineers, will discuss "fixed bridges" at a conference of the officers of the regiment next Saturday at the Army Industrial College. In addition the general plans and requirements of the 376th Engineers for M-day will be discussed.

Other schools and conferences to be held during the coming week will be infantry intelligence on Tuesday, basic field artillery tactics for a staff group on Wednesday, and the service units of the Third Corps Area, Norfolk distributing point, Washington distributing unit, Fort Meade, Md., mobilization unit on Friday.

Service Sidelights

The Neutrality Patrol Was Fun—at First

By J. G. N.

The Navy is getting a bit bored with the neutrality patrol. Not, I hasten to add, that the high command down on Constitution avenue does not see eye to eye with its Commander in Chief's plans to keep the Nation at peace. But the officers and men on patrol, moving back and forth along the coast watching for belligerent warcraft, are getting a little tired of constant and—to date—fruitless watch. So runs the word reaching here from the patrol vessels.

At first, the job was interesting, even exciting say the patrolmen. A great war had started across the seas, and they were the advance guard, the barrier, to keep it away from America. There were constant reports of U-boats being sighted, which were eagerly run down. Every so often, the look-out would spy a bit of wreckage and think it was a periscope. But now, there is day after day of nothing but merchant ships plying the trade routes. Officers and men alike are longing for the greater variety of normal peace-time duty—gunnery practice, squadron drills, maneuvers—a relief from the long runs at sea, and a chance for greater shore leave.

Ahead, lies the winter, with cold winds and snow and ice making watch duty very unpleasant, not at all like southern California waters. Not that the officers and men are soft, but who likes an icy gale in his face? It's like being a cop on a beat in a high-class residential district, one of the coastal patrolmen wrote a friend here—nothing happens for so long you begin to pray for trouble.

For the next few months, however, the Atlantic patrol officers will have something to think about. Selection board time is here again. The first of the boards meets this week in the council room at the Navy Department and begins to cull over the records of senior captains and commanders of the line. Twelve captains will be named for advancement to rear admiral and, as always, several dozen others passed by. A larger percentage of the commanders will be promoted—52 may be placed on the list for advancement as best fitted, and others given promotion as fitted for the higher rank but retired due to lack of vacancies.

Other boards, to select lower ranking officers, will meet throughout the early winter, keeping a large portion of the service on the "anxious seat" till the final reports are posted on the bulletin boards of the Navy's scattered ships.

It's an ill wind that blows no one any good. The old saying might well be applied to the European war. For despite its effect on the peoples of the warring nations, on world trade, and the United States Treasury, one deserving group is benefiting. The increase in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, costly as it is, means promotions and pay increases to tens of thousands of soldiers and sailors. For years, a pay increase has been agitated for the armed services, but the largely voteless service men were not able to put it across. Now, some 30,000 Army enlisted men are getting pay raises, together with a comparable number in the Navy and Marine Corps. The pay scale remains the same, but the big expansion programs mean more jobs in the higher ranks and more ratings all down the line. The Army will have an unprecedented situation, with an estimated 80 per cent of the men holding specialists', sergeants' or corporals grades in the expanded Army.

Remember Kipling's "Tommy:"

"It's Tommy this, an' Tommy that, an' 'chuck 'im out the brute,
"But, it's savior of 'is country when the guns begin to shoot."

Guardsmen Begin Field Maneuvers

Emergency Training Launched Today as D. C. Troops Move Into Fort Meade

By Joseph D. Cooper

Today National Guard troops from the District of Columbia, Maryland and Virginia begin a week of emergency field maneuvers at Fort Meade, Md., where they will remain through Saturday. The general response of officers and troops to a surprise call to duty indicated to some observing officers the availability of the National Guard for emergency duty.

The 121st Engineers is taking its training on week-ends, and, according to report, the 260th Coast Artillery (Antiaircraft) will also take its training on week-ends, December 2 and 3, 9 and 10, and 16 and 17 instead of going to Fort Story, as originally anticipated.

An indication of some of the tactical problems to be tackled is given in the list of publications staff officers have been directed to take with them. Some of the titles are "Attack," "Defense," "Special Operations," "Reconnaissance, Security, Marches, Halts," "Combat Orders" and "Defense Against Aircraft and Mechanized Forces on the March and at the Halt."

Jensen Challenges

Maj. Just C. Jensen invites all comers to challenge the District National Guard to a rifle match to be held indoors at the Armory, Sixth street and Pennsylvania avenue northwest. The subcaliber rifle would be used. Maj. Jensen may be reached through the adjutant general's office.

As a surprise award, Technical Sergt. Charles F. Buck, Regular Army sergeant instrustor, attached to the District Guard for the last 20 years, was awarded the 20-year bar by Brig. Gen. Albert L. Cox at a ceremony on the mall last Tuesday night.

Esso Marketers have made available to National Guard organizations, one subject at a time, three motion pictures, including the projection apparatus, the operator and the screen. Headquarters has booking cards available for the following pictures: "Safari on Wheels," a talking picture of a motor journey of exploration in Africa; "News in the Air," depicting the history of news gathering methods, from the ancient to the modern, and "Trees and Men;" a story of lumber and forest preservation.

The 260th Coast Artillery detail that went to Pontiac, Mich., to bring home four 2½-ton trucks recently told an interesting story of witnessing a formal guard mount by the Canadian Essex Highlanders, headquartered at Windsor, Ontario.

The Canadians greeted the American troops most cordially and placed them in positions of honor to witness the ceremony. The regulated uniform of the regiment is kilts of Scottish plaid and members of the 260th brought back lively memories of the Highlanders stepping briskly across the field to the tune of bagpipes.

Personnel of the detail included Col. Walter W. Burns, Capt. Robert Martin, Sergt J. P. King, Staff Sergt. C. J. Taylor, Sergt. Carson M. Howell, Sergt. Joseph E. Robey, Sergt. Palmer N. Stanley, Sergt. Joseph R. Shugart, Pvt. First Class William F. Mayes, Pvt. First Class Ray Senna, Pvt. First Class Cummings A. Sanborn, Pvt. First Class Gilbert S. Poe, Pvt. C. J. Fothergill and Pvt. With War in Europe, Tourists Turn Eyes to Latin America

Dominican Republic Plans Extensive Program of Building and Public Works For Further Accommodation of Travelers

In view of conditions created by the conflict in Europe, the Latin-American countries are becoming of even greater importance than ever before in respect to the United States. For business, political and economic relations, as well as for travel and pleasure visits, the citizens of the United States are looking toward their neighbors in the Western Hemisphere with keen interest. This situation is already being reflected in the increased travel between the United States and the American republics, since the Latin-American countries are now attracting those individuals and groups who would normally go to Europe.

In line with this new trend in tourism, the Dominican Republic, first of the Latin-American nations to take advantage of the situation, is launching an extensive program of building and public works for the further accommodation of travelers. The project will include the erection of hotels, mountain inns, apartments and additional residential facilities in Ciudad Trujillo, the capital, as well as in other cities.

The Dominican republic, because of its proximity to the United States, is fast becoming a mecca for travelers. Four steamship lines have regular sailings to Dominican ports from nine coastal cities of the United States, and the country is less than 24 hours distance from New York or Chicago by airplane, and only an 8-hour flight from Miami.

Ciudad Trujillo (formerly Santo Domingo, and renamed in honor of Generalisimo Rafael L. Trujillo Molina, who rebuilt and modernized the city during his administration) is best known as "The Birthplace of America," or "The Mother City of America." Here, in marked contrast, the historic past is side by side with modernity. In the ancient Cathedral of Santo Domingo, oldest in the New World, lies remains of Christopher Columbus, the great discoverer, and nearby is Alcazar of Diego Colon, son of Columbus, and the first Viceroy of West Indies. And it was from this ancient city that the Spanish conquistadores, Balboa, Cortez, Pizarro, Ponce de Leon and others, planned their expeditions.

Santo Domingo, in common with the remainder of the country, enjoys a pleasant climate all the year round. The average temperature for this and other cities seldom exceeds 78 degrees, and inland it is ordinarily much cooler. The traveler will find excellent accommodations, transportation by rail, motor, boat and plane of the most modern variety, and all the other luxuries of life as we know it today.

If the traveler prefers a smart seashore resort, there is Boca Chica, with its beautiful beach, its fashionable country club, and its picturesque surroundings. Here salt water bathing, deep sea fishing, yachting and other water sports may be enjoyed and there are excellent golf and tennis facilities.

Atlantic City Will Receive Philatelists

Atlantic City.

The Nation's leading stamp collectors from all sections of the country will be here next week to attend the fifth American Philatelic Congress, being held under the auspices of the Atlantic City Stamp Club.

Sessions of the congress get under way at the Hotel Traymore on Friday and continue through Sunday, with more than 300 students of philately expected to attend. A number of papers will be read by authorities on the subject and there will also be an exhibit of rare and outstanding collections.

Postmaster General James A. Farley has announced that a postal substation will be set up here for the congress and instructs collectors desiring this special cancellation for philatelic purposes to send self-addressed envelopes under cover to the "Postmaster, Fifth American Philatelic Congress Station, Atlantic City."

Meanwhile, some 500 or 600 of the Nation's outstanding educators will be meeting at Chalfonte-Haddon Hall. Groups which will be holding their annual sessions at that time include the American Association of University Professors, the Middle States Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, the Association of Modern Language Teachers of the Middle States and Maryland and the Middle States Association of History and Social Science Teachers.

Mexican Tour Planned

E. R. Rochester, who for 30 years has conducted tours from Washington to the Pacific Coast and the National Parks, is planning to operate two all-expense tours to Mexico. The tours will leave Washington via the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad December 15 and January 12. Each trip will be 17 days in duration, allowing 10 full days in Mexico City, visiting Puebla, Guadalupe, Cordoba, the Pyramids of the Sun and Moon, Toluca, Orizaba, Xochimilco, Cuernavaca and Taxco.

The tours will include round-trip railroad transportation and selected Pullman accommodations; double rooms with twin beds and private bath at the Hotel Geneve in Mexico City, and at the leading hotels in Tehuacan and Taxco; all meals for the ten days in Mexico, all motor tours, lecturer's services; entrance fees, tips, and transfers between stations and hotels.

Golf Holds Spotlight At Pinehurst, N. C.

Pinehurst, N. C.

Four golf events of prominent interest are scheduled at this mid-South resort during the remainder of the month. Highlight of these is the nineteenth annual Carolina Tournament for Women which will be held November 29. Mrs. Estelle Lawson Page, of Chapel Hill, N. C., former women's national champion, winner of the 1938 event, is expected to defend her title in the 18-hole medal play contest.

The Tin Whistles, men's golfing organization with headquarters at the Pinehurst Country Club, will hold its November par bogey contest best ball of all four partners, next Saturday. The Silver Foils, the Tin Whistles' feminine counterpart, will stage their November medal play tourney Wednesday. Trophies will be awarded winners in all of these events. The Pinehurst Country Club will hold the third of a series of putting tournaments for women next Saturday on the newly revamped course in front of the clubhouse.

As an added attraction to its resort life during the autumn, winter and spring periods, Pinehurst is instituting an extensive entertainment for the current season.

Miami Beach Season Already Under Way

Miami Beach, Fla.

Homes afloat and homes ashore are open early here this season. While precisely defined statistics are lacking, year-round residents of Miami Beach estimate that the 1939-40 season started between a fortnight and a whole month ahead of previous years.

Scores of residences, sometimes unoccupied until Northern snow flurries have given way to real winter storms, have been in use for weeks, and more are opening every day. Meantime the procession of yachts, which form winter residences for many Northerners, has assumed the proportions of a parade, considerably in advance of similar migrations in years gone by.

Nearest approach to actual statistics comes from the utility companies which show the present Miami Beach season more than 25 per cent ahead of previous ones.

William K. Vanderbilt's Alva already has been made fast to the dock at his Terminal Island estate, and other palatial craft are arriving daily.

Meantime, yacht harbor dockmasters report pier reservations considerably in excess of those of former years. George L. Bourne's Onwego from New York, the Sunshine III of the Harvey W. Harpers, of Larchmont, N. Y.; the Virago of the George F. Goetz, jrs. of Chicago, and the Ellenar of the Chapman J. Roots, of Terre Haute, are among the yachts assigned to the Flamingo piers.

American Flag Cruises Go to Tropical Ports

Great White Fleet Continues Weekly Southern Sailings

With American steamship lines operating under normal schedules unaffected by the present European situation, vacationists, confident in the safety of cruise ships flying the American flag, are now taking advantage of the attractive cruise offerings to American and Caribbean ports.

In anticipation of capacity bookings for its fall and winter cruises, the cruise ships of the United Fruit Co.'s Great White Fleet will continue without interruption their regular program of weekly sailings from New York to South America, Central America and the West Indies.

Designed especially for tropical service with their comfortable staterooms and breeze-swept promenade and game decks, the United Friut Co.'s first-class American flag cruise ships provide an unparalleled cruise-holiday with a wide variety of gay, well-planned shipboard activities.

Games, parties and other entertainment are scheduled to make every moment at sea thrilling and memorable. Such fun-packed games as shuffleboard, deck tennis and horse racing enliven the care free daylight hours, while the evening may be spent viewing sound movies or dancing to the lilting melodies of popular orchestras.

Embarking on the popular 15-day all-expense cruises from New York, Great White Fleet passengers cruise the sheltered route southward to Cuba, Costa Rica and Panama. Equally popular is the 15-day cruise from New York to Kingston, Jamaica, Barranquilla, Cartagena and the Canal Zone. On the 26-day cruise, the elaborate itinerary includes visits to Cuba and Honduras and a two-week exploration tour of the world-famous highlands of Guatemala.

Highlighting the Guatemalan tour is a thrilling 200-mile rail trip through the lush countryside and mountain regions to mile-high Guatemala City. In travelling through the Quiche-Mayan country, visitors to Guatemala's highlands, under the leadership of expert guides, explore ancient Mayan and Spanish ruins, mountains, lakes and waterfalls—all peacefully distant from bustling cities. And as a notable convenience, included in the all-inclusive tour rate are splendid accommodations at fine hotels, inns, and lodges.

Especially attractive is the 19-day Guatemala tour that departs every Tuesday from Philadelphia, marking the beginning of 11 days of gay shipboard activities that include a wide variety of deck games and sports. Arriving at the Guatemalan seaport of Puerto Barrios on the neutral flag ships of the Great White Fleet, vacationists spend seven days exploring Guatemala's romantic highlands on guided motor tours.

'Champion' to Begin Florida Service

The new streamlined train with which the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad and the Florida East Coast Railway will inaugurate the fastest New York-Florida service in history, has been named "The Champion," officials have announced. The train will operate on a daily basis, and the service will be inaugurated December 1.

The Atlantic Coast Line, which will operate two of the new trains, will co-ordinate its daily service with the Florida East Coast Railway, which will also take delivery on two of the new flyers. Three trains of the new fleet will ply between Miami and New York, the fourth operating on a fast daily service between Jacksonville and Miami.

Bradenton Steps Out

Bradenton, Fla.

"Bradenton Steps Out" is the keynote this season at "Florida's garden spot of the West Coast" as this city counts its biggest winter visitor registration in years. Already more than a 65 per cent gain over registrations a year ago is noted.

Colombia, Third Largest South American Land, Charmingly Combines the Old With the New

Baranquilla and Cartagena Offer Striking Contrast

One very interesting foreign country within the neutral zone is Colombia. It is the third largest republic in South America and one of the richest and most progressive. In some respects very modern; in others it seems still to belong to the days of the Conquistadores. It was the first South American country to inaugurate air traffic on a commercial scale, and today has an extensive network of airlines linking together important cities and forming part of the great airline system which covers the continent. During the past decade the country has put into operation an extensive roadbuilding program—with the result that many new and fine highways now make accessible regions which formerly were almost out of reach, and eventually will join the Pan-American highway. Its railway system also has been extended considerably in recent years.

Colombia is blessed with untold wealth. Most of the emeralds mined today come from Colombia, and its platinum output is exceeded only by Russia's. Gold, silver and copper are very plentiful. To these add valuable woods and medicinal plants, tagua nuts, sugar, cacao, cotton, and the world's second largest coffee crop—and you have some idea of the wealth that is Colombia's.

The two aspects of Colombia, modern and colonial, are vividly presented by a pair of strangely contrasting ports visited one after the other on Grace Line's weekly 18-day cruises to the Caribbean—Barranquilla and Cartagena. The former is fresh and crisp as a new dollar bill. It was founded and built, as a complete town, by a young mining engineer from the United States far sighted enough to realize that the site was perfect for a much-needed modern port. Since then it has grown into a large city with one of the most beautiful hotels on the continent, a $3,000,000 waterworks, villas representing about every nationality and period of architecture, and shops where tourists can buy cheaply everything from Panama hats and tortoise shell articles to pearls and emeralds.

The complete antithesis to Barranquilla is Cartagena, which six years ago celebrated its 400th birthday. During the days of her glory, Cartagena was surpassed in importance in the New World only by Lima and Mexico City. This great stronghold the Conquistadores founded upon an excellent natural harbor entered from the sea through Little Mouth, Boca Chica, and Big Mouth, Boca Grande. Around the city were thrown mighty walls 50 feet high and 40 feet thick, with sentry houses on top and tunnels and dungeons beneath. In strategic positions on the hills surrounding the city mighty fortresses were erected.

Sandburg Comes Here to Sing His Ballads and Open Bag of Anecdotes

Wilson Teachers Will Present Poet in Talk Thursday Night

At 62, white-headed, big-boned, slow-moving Carl Sandburg is ranked as America's unofficial "poet laureate," one of her leading biographers and her great and beloved troubador.

Of all his admirers, it is perhaps his lecture-goers, those who have heard him reading his own poetry, singing American folk ballads to the accompaniment of his own strumming of his ancient guitar and telling anecdotes with his own sly humor—who have the warmest personal regard for the man.

Carl Sandburg, who will be presented Thursday night in the Roosevelt High School auditorium under the auspices of Sigma Tau Delta Fraternity, of Wilson Teachers College, has rare ability to read his own poetry well.

But despite the international fame that has come to him, Carl Sandburg is still a shy man. Despite years of working for newspapers, he shuns publicity as much as he can.

Likes Old Clothes

He has a preference for old clothes, for modest restaurants where he can get "soup-bone soup" or spaghetti, and intimate social gatherings. He likes comfort, cares nothing for and is not impressed by pretentiousness of any sort.

His own home on the sand dunes of Lake Michigan, near Harbert, Mich., is comfortable and commodious but not pretentious. He lives there, when not on tour or gathering material for his writing, with his wife and their daughters. Mrs. Sandburg is a sister of Edward Steichen, the famous New York photographer.

His love of simplicity, his essential honesty, reflects his beginnings. Born of Swedish immigrant parents in Galesburg, Ill., he had to leave school at 13 to help his family eke out a livelihood. Through years of odd jobs he managed to keep alive his interest in reading and a year in Peurto Rico with the American Army during the Spanish American War persuaded him that he needed an education.

Upon his return to the States he enrolled in and worked his way through Lombard College. College opened his way to a newspaper job and newspaper writing in turn led to his poetry. Mr. Sandburg's best-known books include "Chicago Poems," "Smoke and Steel," "Slabs of the Sunburnt West," "Rootabaga Stories," "Rootabaga Pigeons" and "The People, Yes." New volumes of his monumental biography of Abraham Lincoln have recently been published.

Tickets for Mr. Sandburg's appearance will be on sale at the Roosevelt High School Auditorium the night of the lecture, and reservations may be made in advance by telephoning Wilson Teachers College.

Mount Vernon Students Open Sports Week

Outdoor sports and indoor drama hold the spotlight this week-end at Mount Vernon Seminary, where the student body has just completed its first program of plays for the fall term, and is about to enter upon its annual "sports week" of the autumn season.

Sports week is sponsored jointly by the department of physical education, headed by Miss Jean A. Pearson, assisted by Patricia Urner; and the Mount Vernon Seminary Athletic Association, composed of students interested in sports. The executive board of the athletic association has for its president, Jean Guernsey, of Olando, Fla.; for its vice president, Helen Millis, of High Point, N. C.; and for its secretary-treasurer, Georgia Oliver, of Atlanta, Ga. Rivalry between the Yellow and the White teams in the sports week is very keen, with Alice Webber, of Montgomery, Ala., as captain of the Yellow team, and Barbara Baker, of Newark, Ohio, as captain of the White team.

The various sports activities are headed as follows: Archery, Nancy McMillan, of Knoxville, Tenn.; hockey, Esther Coburn, Hartford, Conn., tennis, Lorraine Anderson, Malden, Mass.; volley ball, Patsey Smith, Pasadena, Calif.; riding, Cecilia Beggert, Pittsburgh, Pa., assisted by Mary Dalrymple Haywood, of Biltmore Forest, N. C.

The program of one-act plays which was given last night was presented by the drama students of Mount Vernon Seminary, under the direction of Edith M. Mack, with the entire group of 45 girls taking an active part in the program, either as players, or as production aides, 25 of the students having worked on the scenery, back drops, properties, costumes and lighting.

The plays presented were, "The Tenth Word," "The Purple Doorknob," and "Suppressed Desires," and the players in them came from homes all over the United States, as well as from the Capital City.

Dr. Gellermann Promoted at N. U.

Appointment of Dr. Josef E. Gellermann, associate professor of international relations of the National University, as chairman of the department of government and as executive assistant to the dean of the faculty of economics and government, was announced yesterday by Chancellor Leslie C. Garnett.

Dr. Gellermann studied at Columbia University, the Georgetown University School of Foreign Service, the George Washington Graduate School and the National University Graduate Law School.

Earl E. Batten, of Washington, sophomore student in the Tulane University College of Engineering, has been elected to membership in the student branch of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, national professional orgnaization. Batten is the son of Mrs. Ellen Stanley, 2803 Rhode Island avenue northeast, in Washington.

MARY CLIFTON LAFORCE is new president of the Chevy Chase Junior College student council. She was chosen in recent college elections.

G. U. Alumni To Be Honored At Dance

Conlon and Kelly Cochairmen of Affair Wednesday Night

Taking advantage of a holiday, the Washington Club of Georgetown University will give a Thanksgiving dance Wednesday evening at the Willard Hotel in honor of local alumni.

Michael J. Conlon and James J. Kelly are the cochairmen in charge of the party, which is the first formal dance of the season for the Washington collegians. There will be dancing from 10 p. m. to 1 a. m., with Northrop Church's orchestra furnishing the music.

The Washington Club is composed chiefly of day students residing in this area and now is one of the largest organizations at the Hilltop. Alumni representing all departments of the university are invited.

Classes generally will be dismissed Tuesday and will resume on Monday, giving out-of-town students ample time to return to their homes.

Attend N. Y. A. Game

Headed by the president of the university, a large delegation of Georgetown students and alumni attended the game yesterday with New York University and the preliminary events that marked it as one of the outstanding Georgetown celebrations in the metropolis. With the New York alumni acting as hosts, a pre-game smoker and reception for the team was held Friday evening at the New York Athletic Club. In addition to the Very Rev. Arthur A. O'Leary, S. J., president; Coach Jack Hagerty and the coaching staff of New York University were among the principal guests. Prominent athletes and coaches also were on hand to greet the Hilltoppers, who have a strong following in New York.

Robert J. Scovell, who has just returned to this country from Antwerp, Belgium, on duty with the United States Foreign Service, has been appointed a member of the French faculty at Georgetown. He is associated with the School of Foreign Service, which he attended in 1921-23 as a special student after graduating from the University of Indiana.

A number of former Foreign Service School students have returned to this country recently, some because of routine transfers and others because of war conditions abroad. Joseph Medenach, a former steamship representative at Prague, Germany, was among them. Another, Maj. Philip Faynonville, military attache at the American Embassy in Leningrad, U. S. S. R., recently was transferred to duty in the United States. Leonard M. Green notified the school he has resigned as American consul at Malta and returned home.

Columbus U. Students Choose 'Sweethearts'

Spirited balloting by the students in the department of law, accountancy and junior college of Columbus University last week resulted in the nomination of ten girls for the title of "Sweetheart of Alpha Mu," local chapter of Sigma Delta Kappa, national legal fraternity. Later balloting will reduce this number to three from whom the "Sweetheart" will be chosen at the third annual Crimson and Gold Ball on New Year's eve.

Seasoned Timber

Chapter 57

SUSAN helped type and address envelopes for a while and went around to talk to members of her class now living in Clifford. But as soon as her school closed, she was sent for by some Cadoret cousins on the other side of the State whom she had promised to visit, and after that, of course, Canby's time was too much taken up with driving over the mountain and back to allow him to give more than casual help to Timothy's lost cause. He did, breathing hard and sucking his pencil, compose and sign as an alumnus of the Academy a letter to be mimeographed, especially addressed to his fellow-alumni, giving as his reason for standing by Prof. Hulme and Mr. Dewey that, although he supposed he had, like everybody else, done a dirty trick or two in his life, he'd be darned if he was going to let somebody hire him to.

BUT THIS, of course, was answered at once by a statement from an alumnus on the other side, which was mimeographed and energetically circulated by the Randall-Bowen-Gardner workers. For young Bowen had stayed on through the summer (Timothy wondered, but never aloud, whether Pete Gardner was paying his board), and had taken, to help the campaign for Gardner, his real ability and his following among the students, small in number but very much under his spell and with more money at their command than all the rest of the student body put together.

"Now, Delia, get out your notebook: one of the catch questions that is often put into examinations is about the French words that look and sound like English words but mean something quite different. Some of the worst translating mistakes are made with them. You might set down a few of the most common ones. Ready to write? Grand, meaning big in size but not grand; assister a, meaning to be present and not to be of aid; collier, meaning necklace not collar nor ship that carries coal; grappe, meaning cluster not grape; aimer, more often than not meaning to like rather than to love; amour . . ."

"Yes, Mr. Hulme?"

"I see that is not a case in point. This will have to do for today. Go on from Page 113 as far as you have time for before the next lesson."

Both sides adopted, of course, every campaign device the other side invented as soon as it was put into use, and invented new ones of their own. The Bowen-Randall-Gardner workers, like those under Timothy's direction, also went up and down the streets and back roads and highways—into offices and farms and factories and homes, paying campaign calls on voters. They, too, issued mimeographed bulletins and circulated them in Clifford and among the out-of-town alumni, the cost covered by a subscription taken up among the businessmen of town. Those bulletins were not so well written as the ones arranged by Timothy with Mr. Dewey to help him strike the accurate middle of the Clifford note. They did not need to be; the wine they offered needed no bush. Prosperity! they cried. Plenty of work for all! Money circulating fast, no matter what depression did to other towns! Fine young bucks in white flannels and custom-made shoes carelessly handing out dollars as the present students handed out pennies! Lower taxes! Prestige for Clifford! Rich city families moving into town! A reservoir built to supply the town with water! A sewage system installed! Money in the banks! A market for anything the farms could produce! Better movies! Jobs! jobs! jobs! And as for the Academy, the picture of its future drawn by Bowen was like the Promised Land—now he wrote of fine buildings, now of the wealthy clientele, now of the future alumni who would be gold mines for gifts and bequests, now of what those gifts would bring—a fine auditorium, a theater, great playing fields, dormitories—and then a bulletin appeared devoted entirely to explaining that all these marvelous opportunities were to be free, absolutely free to our own people, even more so than now, because of the provision for scholarships for needy youth made in the will of the Academy's great benefactor. Hence Clifford young people, it was pointed out, would profit by all this without anybody's having to pay for it.

Mr. Dewey, himself greatly gifted with Yankee contrariness, and counting on it in his fellow townsmen, was delighted by this last bulletin. As he was by young Dr. Craft's sardonic and frequently voiced certainty that all this talk about Vermonters as representing old-Americanism was the bunk, that Clifford people would show by a smashing majority for Gardner that they were just what he always said they were, grubby penny-pinchers who had nothing in them when a dollar bill was in sight but a grab-reflex. Mr. Dewey was pleased to have Dr. Craft say this in the rasping, cocksure manner which was his specialty and in fact often quoted him, cynical intonation and all, concluding cheerfully, "That's what he thinks of us!"

On the same principle, from the day their opponents' something-for-nothing bulletin appeared, he took copies of it with him when he went with Timothy to make house-to-house visits. He kept it out of sight when they called on those of the well-to-do people in the village who received Timothy and himself coldly, who sat bored, hostile, impatient, while they presented their case, who gave them no hold for discussing their own opinions because they were careful to say no more than an adroit, cautious, eel-smooth formula, like, "You must know perfectly well that I don't agree with you in this matter! What is the use of saying the same things over and over about it?"

BUT AMONG people with incomes or salaries there were about the same proportion, it seemed to Timothy, as among those who worked for wages, who listened with approval to the anti-Wheaton arguments. These people, however, differed from plainer citizens in that they gloomily felt themselves in a fore-defeated minority. They, superior as they were, saw the issue clearly. But they were sure to be out-voted on election day by the majority, incapable by definition of seeing more than what lay under their noses. They listened with sympathy to Timothy's carefully thought-out presentation of the case, nodding their heads in accord, but at the end, speaking in their correct and literate language, they were apt to say, "You're right of course, Mr. Dewey, this is an attack on the basic principle of democracy and all that. And I'm sure it is very fine and disinterested of you, Mr. Hulme, to take this stand, but really . . .! People who don't read anything but the local newspapers, who don't follow the news of the day with any understanding of its meaning, who have never studied the principles of government—how can you expect them to see more in any proposition than what lies on the surface? And of course what lies on the surface of this is a million dollars to be had for the taking!"

"Why can't I expect'm to see the inwardness of this when we're spending every minute of two months talkin' about nothin' else?" was Mr. Dewey's answer to this gambit.

Theirs to his was, "Oh, it goes without saying that if it weren't for the very creditable effort your side is making, no one at all would vote against this bequest."

"Why don't ye ever say 'our' side?" Mr. Dewey always asked with acerbity.

"Oh, I meant that . . . . Oh course . . . It was a slip of the tongue. I want you and Mr. Hulme to understand that I shall vote for Dr. Foote. And so will my wife. But you do get my point, don't you, about the hopelessness of expecting the average voter to give up a visible present material advantage for the sake of an idea?"

'What I don't see is," Mr. Dewey often said at about this point in this often-repeated discussion, "what makes you think that only the folks that read the Boston Transcript have got sense enough to . . . to . . ."

". . . to tell a hawk from a handsaw," Timothy had once suggested, as the old man hesitated for a comparison. Mr. Dewey had been enchanted with the phrase, recognizing its lilt as native to his vernacular, and used it heartily thereafter, as a variant to one of his own inventions with which he often brought an interview to a laughing close, "Your idee is that 'ordinary' voters can't see anything except what's right under their noses. Let me tell you something—'lection day in this town will show that they've got just as long noses as yours."

For that kind of an interview, the Bowen something-for-nothing bulletin stayed in Mr. Dewey's pocket. But as soon as they began a call on a working man or woman, Mr. Dewey got it out and held it in his hand. He waited for the right moment in the talk, which was always familiar, for he and Timothy knew personally every man and woman they visited, and Mr. Dewey was related to many of them: to the farmers who stopped hoeing to lean over the fence, or stand with one foot on the hub of a wagon wheel, to the wage earners eating lunch out of their dinner pails as they listened, to the old women sitting back on their heels from weeding in their garden, to the young mothers dressing the latest baby on the back porch. When the right moment came he opened the Bowen statement, read passages from it, and asked what people with sense thought of folks who offered you a whole lot for nothing—especially when they offered it to you as pay for doing what a decent man would be ashamed to do. And this gave the opening for Timothy to say, out of his observation, that he thought the result in the long run of all these promises for the betterment of the future of ordinary Clifford young people would be simply their disappearance from the student body and their appearance in the ranks of chambermaids and hired men working in the dormitories and on the grounds of the new academy.

"But that's not the point; that's not the real point at all," he always went on with words which, if the talk had been on a city street corner, would have been jostled and elbowed by city noise and haste and smartness till their grandeur looked only dowdy and old-fashioned. Timothy often wondered whether if he had been confronted with the melancholy knowingness of city eyes and with slick city clothes bought yesterday to be discarded tomorrow, if he had not had the timeless dignity of the old American countryman beside him, he could have spoken so simply and naturally as he did of honor and rectitude and the duty of the strong and safe to the weak and threatened.

"This hasn't happened to us just by a queer chance," he told them. "It's a snarl from one wolf of the pack that's closing in on democracy everywhere . . . By democracy I mean what we call Americanism. You've only to read the papers . . ." And then knowing very well that they did not, in the newspapers they read, learn of those attacks, he passed on to them whatever was in the day's papers that was to his purpose. "And if Americanism is to be saved it won't be by anything the high-ups do, any more than it ever is, but because every man jack of us jumps at the drop of the hat to fight the local attack on it that happens in his own town or his own county or his own State. Do you remember we wondered how Louisiana people could have let Huey Long make monkeys of them? The point was that when they were right up against the choice between sticking by democratic principles and letting fascism get the jump on them in their own lives, they didn't have the backbone to hold the fort for American ideas. Well, here's fascism, right in our lives, trying to buy us into indorsing one of its dirtiest ideas. Our plain old town that's just gone about its business for 170 years—it's been picked up and set down on the front line where the fighting is. The race-prejudice of that bequest is an open, shameless attempt to knock down and kick to death the principles we were brought up in and still believe in.

We're put where we've got to choose between running up the white flag at the first shot, or standing fast. It's not just a question of what happens in our small community. If we surrender now, after all the talk about it, it'll be taken as a sign that Americans haven't got the stuff in them to stand fast. Over in France when our soldiers first began to arrive, everybody on both sides was wondering—out loud, too—'Have they got it in them to stand up under fire?' And when the first Americans went into action at Chateau-Thierry, you'd better believe everybody was watching them. Well, they did stand up—they went forward under fire. And from that time on, the world knew the rest of our soldiers could. Now we're under fire. The question is, "Can we stand up under it? Or can't we?"

SOMETIMES in the midst of such an open and unabashed appeal to honor and idealism, he thought of Downer and the names Downer would have called such talk—any talk at all of ideals— pious, hypocritical, sickening. Downer's flesh would have crawled on his bones to hear a grown man saying seriously in conversation with a fellow-townsman that every citizen has a duty to defend collective freedom. Downer would be ashamed to be seen with a person so sickly minded, so priggish as to talk about honorableness. Downer would have turned away, too disgusted to listen.

The country men and women to whom he spoke did not turn away. They listened. Silently for the most part, without the faintest sign of what they were thinking, but attentively. Having thought of Downer, Timothy would say, "What Mr. Randall and Mr. Gardner tell us is that we would all get rich out of the price paid us to join the gangsters that are beating up one part of the human race. Mr. Dewey and Dr. Foote and I are sure they are mistaken about this, and so are a great many other Clifford people—you can see who a lot of them are by the signatures on some of the mimeographed statements we're sending out. We feel very certain from what's happened in other places, that mighty little of that million dollars would ever filter through to any of us ordinary people. But even if it would, even if accepting that money would mean more cash in our pockets—look! we're not city folks who've got to have money or give up the ghost! We're Vermonters. We've managed till now, without any more money than we can make out of our own work in our own valley. We can afford to be Americans! Because we haven't got anything to be afraid of, ourselves, we can afford to stand up for people who can't stand up for themselves, when they're not given the fair chance our country promises us all."

Yes, the motto that his great-grandmother had worked in cross-stitch, that his father has brought across the ocean, that had hung fading in its moldy, genteel Norman-French on his walls all these years, it blew gallantly over the forces he led; new and vital in Yankee speech, it fluttered companionably beside the Stars-and-Stripes, it flashed back to the brilliant American sunshine colors of imperishable brightness.

He said, of course, only a part of all this to any one person. He thought he came to have a sort of instinct about which thing to say to which person; and he hoped he came to have some notion about when to stop. But there were no outward indications to guide him. The man or woman to whom they were talking usually listened in impassive silence, eyes bent down on the ground, or looking far into the distance. When Timothy stopped, Mr. Dewey added, as they turned to go, something brief and weighty about the danger of engaging the town to all eternity by any kind of a promise, let alone a promise that would force the Clifford children of the future to perpetuate a despicable action their grandparents had been fooled into, and ended, "Well, good day to you, Emily." "Glad to have seen you, Burt."

Their interlocutor seldom said anything more to the respected principal of the academy than the mannerly Clifford formula of, "Well, good day, Prof. Hulme. Call again when you're a-goin' by." And, "I'm much obliged to you for stoppin' in, Mr. Dewey," which by the Clifford code was due to Mr. Dewey's age and his position as moderator of town meeting. Going back to their car, the two visitors could see that the life they had interrupted went on as though they had not been there. The elderly woman was again stooping her ginghamed back over her row of beets; the farmer was once more walking behind his cultivator or trudging out to his barn, or, on the shiftlessly kept farms, was once more sitting in dreamy idleness on the end of his brokendown porch; the workman had put back the lid on his dinner pail and taken up his saw; the young mother sat looking down at the baby's downy head in rapt vacant contemplation. Had all their talk and effort done more harm than good to their cause? Had it done anything at all?

TIMOTHY suffered acutely from this lack of any visible responsiveness (which had in short order driven Canby entirely away from the campaign) as he still, after 20 years, suffered in speaking to a Clifford audience, attentive, it is true, but enigmatic as the basalt sphinx and as rewarding to a speaker as dust to a thirsty man. But this Clifford folkway was native to Mr. Dewey. He understood and liked it. When Timothy permitted himself an exclamation of wrath over pouring out his heart's blood to stone walls, he explained, "Why, that's what keeps us folks from gettin' stampeded into doin' what any smart-talkin' feller tells us to. You jes wait and see!"

"Now, Delia, just bear it in mind, even if you are cramming for college entrance, that geometry is not studied to find out where the bisectors of the interior angle of a triangle meet, but because it's the finest product of deductive thinking that anybody of your age has a chance to meet. No, do not put that down in your notes, nobody will ever ask anything about it in an examination, just get it into your head."

Yet it was not all serious, exhausting, dogged effort, that two-month long campaign. There was variety, there were ups and downs and changes in moral atmosphere, light and shade and all the nuances between, as in every longish passage in our complex human life. There were even occasional absurdities. One was when a New York reporter, going up to the principal's house, found Timothy away from home, had a long and distinctly spicy interview with Aunt Lavinia, and in writing it up spoke of her as "one of the picturesque Yankee eccentrics speaking with a strong Vermont twang." That was funny. What was exquisite comedy was the exact equation between Aunt Lavinia's rage at being mistaken—she! Lavinia Coulton!—for a Yankee, and Clifford indignation at the idea that anyone could think that crazy old Mrs. Henry looked or talked like a Windward County woman! Timothy's inward hilarity over the continual boiling up of wrath on both sides sometimes got beyond his control and broke out into helpless audible laughter.

There was comedy, too, in the reception given to the great granite boulder with its memorial plaque which Miss Peck set up in her front yard, carefully and legally on her own land, but so close to the town-owned sidewalk and roadway that passers-by could not fail to read the inscription. This was handsomely engraved on an expensive bronze plate with a conventional wreath of oak leaves and acorns in high relief—"exactly as if it were a historic monument!" cried old Mrs. Washburn, in sorrow and wrath. Mrs. Washburn was important in the local D. A. R. Chapter.

"It is," said Miss Peck, with her usual loquacity.

LEADEN-HEARTED, grimly working, holding himself in with a cruelly tight rein as Timothy was, he laughed aloud like a boy that first day after Miss Peck's monument went up. From the supper-table he could see through the open window the occasional Cliffordite who approached along the sidewalk. The reaction to the first sight of it was always the same:—a surprised slowing down of the pace, astonishment changing into curiosity, a grave approach to read the inscription with the pious Vermont reverence for reminders of the past, the moment of devout bending over to read the lines engraved on the bronze—each time this happened Timothy re-read them in imagination . . .

Sometimes the astonished passer-by, unable to believe his eyes, read through the 20-odd lines again, giving Timothy time to take in fully the drollery of the change from the back respectfully bent in expectation of learning that on this spot stood the house occupied from 1772-1781 by etc., etc., to the spine straightened with a snap as the reader, unaware that he was under observation, stood up and gazed around him blankly. Mr. Dewey, watching with him, said of one man, "Picked up a pocketbook on the sidewalk and found it full of rusty nails, didn't he?"

The first two or three times Timothy's laugh was inward, but when Peter Gardner himself unsuspiciously stooped his rounded waistcoat, adjusted his eyeglasses to read and stood up again, glaring around him with a red face, Timothy caught Mr. Dewey's dancing old eye and they both burst into loud ha! ha! ha! ha! ha's!

Mrs. Washburn's feelings were hurt. "I don't think that's a nice thing to do, Miss Peck," said she, severely. "Not nice at all. Are you going to leave that thing there, the way it is?"

"Oh, no," explained Miss Peck easily. "The inscription isn't completed yet. Day after election I'm going to have those blanks filled in. I've got the man engaged to cut 'rejected' or 'accepted,' whichever way it goes."

"Well, I don't approve of it. I can't understand Mr. Dewey and Prof. Hulme! What call have we got to lose $1,000,000 just so we can have a few Jews in our 'cademy that nobody wants anyhow. Why should we put ourselves out for Jews? They've never done anything for us. I don't like Jews myself. I remember the Jew who used to peddle around laces and pins when I was a girl, and how he'd cheat the very eye teeth out of . . ."

"He was an Armenian Christian," remarked Miss Peck.

"Why, Miss Peck, what's got into you! I never thought you'd be so rude and unkind. I don't understand you at all," cried Mrs. Washburn, ready to weep. "Why, you're a D. A. R. yourself."

"Have another ear of corn?" asked Miss Peck. "Not that it's fit for anything but the pig-pen! I never saw such poor corn as we've got this season."

"What I'd like to know," asked Timothy, "is where you ever got hold of that quotation from Tacitus and John Adams?"

"They taught students something at the 'cademy in my day," said Miss Peck.

Bridge

By Marian H. Barre

The last act of the District Tournament was played Wednesday evening at the Shoreham Hotel when President Hamlin of the Washington Bridge League awarded the Woodward Cup and the trophy of the Evening Star to the new champions, Dr. C. C. McDonnell and Roy Astleford, and Miss K. A. McNutt and W. A. Bolinger.

The presentation took place before the start of the regular monthly team game. It was an abbreviated ceremony, Richmond and Baltimore experts having annexed two out of three trophies. But what the meeting lacked in length it made up in enthusiasm.

Never has there been a more popular win than the McDonnell-Astleford capture of the open title. The winners "need no introduction." Mr. McDonnell is the vice president of the Washington League, former president of the Federal Bridge League, and of the Agriculture Bridge Club, and donor of the McDonnell Cup for pair championship of the latter organization. He is a member of the Pure Food and Drugs section of the Department of Agriculture; his degree is a Ph. D.

Astleford, a member of the Marine Corps, serves on the board of governors of the Federal League, and is the official director of the Washington League. This work requires courtesy and tact, as well as technical qualifications. He possesses them all in full measure. The Woodward Cup was his first major win, as his director's duties prevent him taking part in the games.

The partnership is a new one, functioning for the first time at Hagerstown, where it showed on the honor list. As neither man had time for practice rounds the win came through sheer technical skill, unaided by the psychological factor of a close association.

Miss McNutt, of the intermediate champions, has been playing bridge for less than two years. After a short course of lessons she immediately entered the duplicate field, and that form of the game enthralled her. Her record shows a steady advancement in skill. She has been a frequent winner in many local games. She is employed at the Treasury Department.

Bolinger is an attorney with offices in the National Press Building. He competes in the various clubs in this city, winning many top scores. Th eapture of the Star trophy automatically puts the intermediate champions in the expert class.

Washington players held runner-up place in every District event; these almost-winners also were rewarded on the presentation night. The runners-up were: Mrs. C. W. Boyce and Arch Kepner, who scored second in the open championships; Louis Newman and Dr. A. J. Steinberg, constituting half of the second team in the play for the Eynon Bowl; Miss Frances Jacoby, of Wilmington, and A. M. Hickman, Bala Cynwyd, Pa., completed the intercity quartet; Dr. and Mrs. Steinberg, mixed pair seconds; Mrs. Tom Hamlin and Mrs. Irene Surguy, who were barely nosed out in the women's game, and Mrs. Katherine Fenton and W. M. Evans, intermediate runners-up.

While the results of the tournament were a disappointment to the District group, the local showing is far from negligible. Home teams held the majority of honor places. In the women's game, Mrs. N. T. N. Robinson ranked third with Mrs. Rutherford, of Baltimore. Mrs. Charles Kavanaugh and Mrs. W. St. Aubin finished fourth. In the opens, Lewis and Lloyd Tubbs were third, Mrs. W. S. Athey and Tom Flood, fifth. The team of Mrs. Surguy, Hermann, Stone and Perkins came third in the Eynon match; the defending Lemon team tied for fourth. Mrs. Eugene Nolan and Al Stidham showed in the mixed pair line-up. Dr. F. H. Wiley and Dr. A. Rosenberg were third in the intermediate, Mrs. E. H. Loftin and C. H. Parkman, fourth.

From the standpoint of out-of-town attendance the District losses were a real gain. New York's famous metropolitan championships are an illustration of undiluted local wins. After the New Yorkers held all trophies for several years, it took determined efforts on the part of the A. C. B. L. to put the tournament back on the map. Now with the Eynon Bowl in custory of Grinsfelder, Fisher, Bowie and Shapiro, Baltimoreans will want to keep it there. The Richmond group are sure competitors for the District's tenth annual, since they now hold the Columbia Trophy and the Capital Cup. Mrs. J. E. Folline's double triumph deserves special mention, particularly since she won with a different partner in each game. She was paired with Mrs. A. J. Rosenbloom in the women's event, and with Dr. Arthur Salasky in the mixed pairs.

As a social event the ninth annual was an unqualified success. The vitalizing presence of Secretary McKenney pepped up the show. President Hamlin and Chairmen Watson and Golden did the honors, ably assisted by Commander Corley. Former President Mrs. Swanson made a personal appearance after being out of the game during a protracted illness. Bill Cheeks unfortunately was among the missing. After working like a galley slave to promote the tournament, he was too ill to continue play in the only event he entered.

The first Washington player to become a life master is Mrs. James H. Lemon, wife of the president of the American Contract Bridge League. In announcing the list of lately qualified women life masters, the bulletin of the A. C. B. L. publishes the following names: Mrs. Ely Culbertson, New York; Mrs. Lemon, Washington; Mrs. A. M. Sobel, New York, and Mrs. R. C. Young, Bywood, Pa.

Naming these masters will give the uninitiated some idea of the unusual talents of this District woman who has won every championship of the Washington Bridge League besides holding two national titles.

Classes of instruction in bridge under the Community Center Department will be resumed this week after an unavoidable delay, due to reorganization in the department. The following schedule is announced:

Barre, director; Langley Junior High School, Monday evenings, beginning this evening, classes for beginners and intermediates, Mrs. Robert P. McKinley, leader; Central High School, each Tuesday and Thursday at 7:30 p. m., Maxwell Johnston, director; Roosevelt-MacFarland Community Center, from 8 to 10 each Monday, Mrs. Mirabel Lindsay Rusher, director; Thomson School, Tuesday and Friday evenings, Mrs. Maxwell Johnston, director.

At the Chess Table

By Willard Mutchler.

The annual championship and general tournaments are continuing in full blast at both the Capital City Chess Club and the Washington Chess Divan. At the Capital City Club Henry A. Rousseau, recovered from a short illness, engaged in his first contests and immediately made his presence felt. The former champion handed E. M. Knapp his third consecutive defeat and then drew with Chess Director Ariel Mengarini to relegate the latter to second place in the standings. Present Champion D. H. Mugridge remains in the lead, undefeated. The standings:

Player	W.	L.	Player	W.	L.
Mugridge	2	0	Hostler	0	2
Mengardini	2½	½	Knapp	0	3
Rousseau	1½	½

Several second and third-round games were concluded in Capital City's general tourney, in which the veteran W. B. Mundelle leads with four straight victories. Mundelle kept up his winning ways at the expense of H. S. Gay and H. B. Richardson. E. M. Weeks improved his position in the standings by conquering F. G. Vosburg and drawing with John Alden, jr. F. A. Bolton won from F. W. F. Gleason, but lost to H. S. Gay to leave the standings:

Player	W.	L.	Player	W.	L.
Mundelle	4	0	Weeks	1½	1½
Lane	2	0	Bolton	1	2
Stark	1	0	Gleason	0	2
Alden, jr.	½	½	Richardson	0	2
Gay	1	1	Vosburg	0	2
Woolsey	1	1

At the Chess Divan ambitious C. F. Sieweke has completed his schedule, losing his final game to Joseph Scribante. Scribante bowed to Sol Adler, while the rest of the contestants temporarily idled. The standings:

Player	W.	L.	Player	W.	L.
Knapp	1	0	Adler	1	1
Wagman	1½	½	Stern	1	1
Sieweke	2½	2½	Scribante	1	3

The contestants in the championship fray are expected to progress more rapidly in the future. In the general tourney J. Chmielewski heads the entrants, but F. W. F. Gleason, with more games completed, occupies a strong position. A. B. C. Graves has withdrawn and his place has been taken by J. Heidenreich, who inherited his predecessor's victory over L. Minkoff and his loss to Gleason. Gleason last week defeated Minkoff, who in turn won from Ward Denman. Denman scored over Jack Birman, and Birman vanquished Miss Francis Parama. The standings:

Player.	W.	L.	Player.	W.	L.
J. Chmielewski	1	0	J. Heidenreich	1	1
F.W. Gleason	3	1	N. Wigginton	1	1
W. Denman	2	1	L. Minkoff	2	2
J. Birman	1	1	F. Parama	0	4

Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock Sol Adler will hold forth in a free simultaneous exhibition at the Chess Divan, which the public is invited to attend at the Parkside Hotel. Monday evening, November 27, the Capital City Club for the second time will entertain all ladies desirous of learning to play, or improve their play, at chess.

Burch Victorious

Dallas S. Burch, long active in chess affairs at the Department of Agriculture, was one of the three local players who emerged victorious against Georges Koltanowski, world's blindfold champion, in his recent simultaneous exhibitions in this city. Burch defeated the master by careful end-game play, in an engagement which Koltanowski played with the board in sight, and which he regarded as the best game played against him by any of the local players.

Picture of the Week—

Theodore A. Nelbach made the "Picture of the Week." This amateur cameraman, of 1412 Washington avenue, Alexandria, Va., receives the $5 cash award for his print "The Weaver."

This print is distinguished in its simplicity. The pose, the naturalness of the subject and his apparent disregard of the camera is proof of the photographer's ability in handling of a subject.

Mr. Nelbach used a Voigtlander camera. The exposure was one-fiftieth second at f.11 with two photoflood lamps in reflectors.

All amateur photographers among The Post's readership are invited to submit entries in The Post's "Picture of the Week" competition. The prize-winning picture will appear on this page and there will be a prize of $5 for the winner, to be selected by The Post's photographic staff.

RULES:

1. Competition open to everyone except professional photographers and Post employes.
2. Submit as many entries as you wish.
3. Competition ends Wednesday, midnight. The winning picture will be published in the following Sunday's Post.
4. No prints will be returned. By submitting an entry, the contestant automatically gives permission to The Post to use it in any way.
5. The Post will pay $5 for the picture selected as the best of the week.
6. Address your entries to PIX, The Washington Post, Washington, D. C.
7. Write name and address plainly on back of each entry. Give date and title of contest and tell type of camera used, lighting conditions, etc.

Photographs entered in this week's competition must reach The Washington Post by midnight, Wednesday, November 22. Do not duplicate pictures entered in previous contests; the best photograph in the group will be awarded the prize.

Stamp News and Notes From the Clubs

The Washington Philatelist

By William M. Stuart.

Postage stamps made at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing are unquestionably the finest in the world due entirely to a satisfactory American process of engraving. All our stamps are printed from steel plates, each of which is a genuine steel engraving. There can be no comparison between United States stamps and those of foreign nations which are produced by the offset processes and rotogravure mthods.

STUART.

Stamp collectors are especially interested in ink, paper and gum, which play an important part in all stamp collections. Ever since the World War the bureau has been experimenting with ink in an endeavor to produce the finest possible colors for printing stamps. But there is decidely something much more to a stamp than its brilliant color. It was a difficult task to produce a color arrangement for the 1938 regular issue of 32 stamps so as to be acceptable to the Postoffice Department, also the public. All colors used on stamps are accepted only after exhaustive tests, especially that of fading. It is most satisfactory to note that the average collector recognizes green as green, red as red and blue as blue. Stamps are affected by both light and air.

The series of 35 Famous American stamps shortly to be issued must be printed in distinct colors, therefore a hard decision lies before the Postoffice Department and bureau officials. The colors of the 1, 2 and 5-cent stamps are governed by postal conventions. While nothing official has been announced, it is understood a new sepia color for the 10-cent denomination is being considered and may be used as a result of experiments. Sepia is brown, red-yellow in hue, of low saturation and brilliance. The director of the bureau, Mr. Alvin W. Hall, may be depended upon to satisfy the department by using such colors as will stand any test. The American engraving process is the best guard against counterfeiting, as steel is most difficult to imitate.

National Philatelic Week was observed in Washington at the several meetings of the stamp organizations where there were exhibitions, talks and discussion of stamp problems. Under the auspices of the Collectors Club, Branch 5, Society of Philatelic Americans, the fourth annual exhibition was held in the Loew's Capitol Theater. Col. Charles S. Hamilton, president of the Collectors Club, exhibited a frame of covers entitled "Flying the Mail Over the Pacific," showing eight rare covers, including the first Transpacific cover that left San Francisco October 5, 1935. Other frames included: Mrs. Wilna C. Rice, sheets and souvenirs of Czecho-Slovakia, 1937; 1939; F. L. Higgins, issues of 1875, 1897, 1925 and King George VI, Bermuda; C. Hercus Just, "The Philatelic Cavalcade," showing the first issue of many countries from the 1840 "Penny Black" of Great Britain; Svend Yort, Danzig issues, including Berlin overprints; F. R. Rice, covers autographed on first day of issues of commemoratives, the most notable one being the NRA stamp issued August 15, 1933, autographed by President Franklin D. Roosevelt; C. H. Vaughan, war tax stamps of Great Britain, 1916-1917, with errors and varieties, and Valdemar Weiergang, Denmark issues of 1933 to 1936, including air mails, postage dues, Hans Christian Anderson and Reformation series.

At the office of Canadian Pacific Railway, New York avenue and Fourteenth street northwest, frames exhibited included: John S. Petrie, commemorative stamps arranged in a design reading "Too Many New Ones;" Guy Greenwalt, stamps of Czecho-Slovakia, Bohemia, Moravia and Slovakia; C. H. Vaughan, reconstructed sheet of 1841 penny brown; C. Hercus Just, geographical map of United States with commemorative stamps placed in respective locations where stamps were first issued; Mrs. Edward B. Martin, Japanese covers; Henry Gabriel, air mail covers with map of the Americas, and John L. Steele, jr., German inflation stamps on covers; Mrs. MacKnight, "A Calendar of Stamps." All frames will be judged at a later date and three awards have been donated.

Another praiseworthy incident connected with National Philatelic Week was the issuance of a complimentary pass by the Capital Transit Co., this for the fourth time. As far as known the Capital Transit Co. is the only transit company in the country thus honoring philatelists. These items are being collected and the early issues are very rare.

A special philatelic window showing the Philatelic Truck with Postmaster General James A. Farley is attracting much attention at A. H. Whitney's stamp mart on Twelfth street.

At the philatelic exhibition room in the Postoffice Department many new issues of foreign stamps were displayed for the first time.

National Philatelic Week at the Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., Tuesday evening at the Thomson Community Center was observed by a bourse, a talk and an exhibition. Col. Charles S. Hamilton presided and presented as a guest Jacques Kilcher, of Atlantic City, N. J., a prominent collector, who spoke to the club. The latter was accompanied by Mrs. Kilcher, who is proprietor of a stamp shop on the famous boardwalk at Atlantic City.

C. Hercus Just exhibited a dozen frames the stamps of The Netherlands. This collection is one of the best and most complete in Washington and received the fourth award at the 1939 S. E. A. P. exhibition at Philadelphia. Mr. Just explained many of his rarities and varieties displayed.

A vote of thanks was extended the Capital Transit Co. for recognition of National Philatelic Week on the streetcar and bus passes for the week. Upon motion of James A. Duhamel the State Department was invited to extend an invitation to all embassies and legations inviting all visitors from abroad to visit the club.

Many of the new issues were displayed by bourse members and Messrs. Roy and Galloway had a large number of new sales books on hand.

It is expected that at the meeting on Tuesday evening awards of the week's exhibition will be made.

The Capital Precancel Club met at the Thomson Community Center Monday evening. George W. Hawse, secretary, carried on in the absence of the president. The Washington Philatelic Society meeting Wednesday evening at the Mayflower Hotel was in the charge of Morton O. Cooper. The features were an auction sale and bourse.

The Postoffice Department has issued its regulations for the use of precancel stamps during the holiday period. The reason is that in order to facilitate the handling of mail at first, second, and third class post-offices postmasters at such offices are authorized at their option to precancel stamps of the necessary denominations for the payment of postage on second, third and fourth class matter. The new order applies for December only, but the stamps are not to be delivered to the persons presenting parcels for mailing but are to be affixed by the postmaster or employe after proper postage has been paid. Stamps so used are to be precanceled in accordance with the conditions governing the precancellation of postage stamps. Such stamps may not be precanceled by ordinary canceling devices, but only with special equipment furnished for that purpose which prints the name of the postoffice between two heavy parallel lines. Postmasters are also cautioned against the possible nuisance of such stamps and also that the rule applies to December only.

The Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., meets Tuesday evening at the Thomson Community Center, Twelfth and L streets northwest, and the Washington Philatelic Society meets Wednesday evening at the Hotel Mayflower.

Fellers, of the Division of Stamps, announces that orders for the overprinted "Canal Zone" postage stamps are being received at the Philatelic Agency and cannot be filled, as the agency does not handle such issues. Requests for Canal Zone stamps should be addressed to the Postmaster, Balboa Heights, Canal Zone.

¶ Gold mining has reached a peak in Canada—they've just broken the all-time monthly production record. The average yield for this year is five times as great as the famed Klondike region produced at its best. Placer deposits—surface gold—made the Klondike famous. Its Eldorado Creek contained the longest placer deposit ever known. But, unlike other such deposits, the Klondike has not developed lode mines—near the "bed rock"—and today gold mining there is little more than history.

¶ "Pro" football again is having a big season, with attendance marks toppling all over the land. Attendance at last year's big league games totaled well over 1,000,000 and the chances are that this year's paid admissions will exceed that mark. "Pro" football is generally considered a new sport, but it was born 45 years ago in Latrobe, Pa. In contrast with "Whizzer" White's $15,000 salary last year, the first paid player received $10!

¶ Other maps, besides Europe's, are being altered. The paleolithic map, used by archaeologists to place the earliest evidences of human culture, has been changed, now that Stone Age culture has been discovered in Southern Albania. Paleolithic peoples are those who use rough, unpolished stone implements. They don't use metals. And don't think they've entirely disappeared from the earth. Many primitive tribes are still in their own stone age!

¶ A tunnel under New York's East River will be holed through" shortly after November 23. Tunneling was one of the earliest engineering jobs attempted by man. The ancients saw the caverns hollowed by nature and tried to imitate them. But the imitation progressed slowly—it once took 30,000 Romans 11 years to complete a three-mile drainage tube!

¶ Another convention in California! This time the delegates aren't salesmen, but monarch butterflies. The insects, flying in a swarm covering square miles, come to the same group of trees in Pacific Grove every year. The monarchs may be kings in name, but they're dwarfed in size by the bird-winged butterflies of the Malay Archipelago. Monarchs measure three inches across the wings—the female of the Malay species, 12!

GOOFY AMBITIONS

WHAT'S YOURS?

To Fill My Dentist's Teeth!

Boy of Week

Who—Byron Corbin, 18.

Why—He memorized the Greek alphabet at five—now he's studied 20 languages, speaks and writes several of them as fluently as English, and can "battle his way through a conversation" in most of them!

Where—Columbus, Ohio. (He lives at 176 West Frambes avenue.)

Byron Corbin.

Byron Corbin has never been outside the United States. Yet, at five—an age at which most boys are struggling with our own language—he knew Greek.

In junior high, he began Spanish, and soon took up Latin, French and German. He kept abreast of his classes easily, but he says, "I soon discovered that by using my own methods, books and brains, I advanced much more rapidly."

Mastery of four foreign tongues didn't satisfy Byron. He soon delved into languages not offered in his high school—Norwegian, Danish, Italian, Greek, Russian, Swedish, Portuguese and others.

Byron says, "I enjoy talking to persons from various countries for the sheer pleasure of using their languages."

The future? "I hope to find a position which will allow me to live in some foreign country."

Assumes Job Upon School Graduation

She was graduated from high school only last June, yet Joan Laverne Lynn is publisher of two weekly newspapers. She determines policies, writes editorials. She knows what it's like to have to meet a payroll every week.

"When I was graduated from the high school at Redwood City, Calif., Joan, 19, writes Parade, "my father gave me the San Carlos Bulletin and the Belmont Courier because he felt, as I feel, that newspaper work will be a career for me and that these two papers will be good training ground for me and that I will get experience by the trial and error system."

She's getting it. When she took over the papers, she decided they should have a "state affairs" page. She started it and then went to college to learn more about politics and economics. Thus, Joan usually operates the papers, as she says, by remote control.

"When I am in San Carlos and Belmont," she says, "I watch production, write news, sell advertising, check circulation lists, etc."

The combined circulation of the two papers is about 2,300. To get them out, Joan employs four persons full time, about five more part time.

Girl of the West

She rides and ropes like a puncher of the old Wild West; she's performed in rodeos all over the country. But all that is just fun for 17-year-old Sydna Yokley. Her job is something else—raising cattle and horses. At times she's sent 150 steers to market.

"I've been raising cattle all my life," the Canadian, Tex., girl says, "at first with my father, but on my own the last four years. I started because my father started me—at the time of my birth—by giving me one calf."

But what happened afterward was Sydna's own doing. When 13, she borrowed money on the cattle she had and bought more. Few months later, she was able to pay off the loan and, by selling her steers, cleared $1,500.

As far as her stunt riding is concerned: "I have ridden in 50 or 60 rodeos," she writes Parade.

Three of a Kind

Teachers confused by twins ought to stay away from Joplin Junior College, Joplin, Mo. Among the freshmen there are triplets—Robert Henry, Helen Frances and Frank William Knell, jr.—all taking the same subjects and all in the same classes!

The triplets have plagued teachers all their 17 years. They started in kindergarten together and have come right up the line, always in the same rooms. "The boys are almost identical," they write, "confusing friends and teachers, while Helen is herself although at times she resembles the boys very much.

They've always been in the upper third of their class in studies and have ranked near the top in attendance. Robert has never been absent or tardy, Frank has missed only three days and Helen a week.

On the Bottom

Six dollars and two years of work have given two 18-year-old boys a healthy young business diving to recover lost articles and to fix boats.

Dick Clement and Charles Germaine made their helmet, though they had few tools. "It sure took a lot of figuring to make our idea practical," Dick writes Parade. "I tested it out in the bay because Chuck can't swim, and I promptly got lost on the bottom because of the window's steaming up. I had to climb the air hose."

So the boys had their helmet, but couldn't get any jobs. Then a man drowned in the bay near Traverse City, Mich., where the boys live, and the police couldn't find the body Dick located it. "It was really scary work," he comments.

It brought them more jobs, though They've recovered sunken outboard motors, repaired boats from underwater. They get between eight and ten dollars plus expenses for such jobs. All the money has gone back into their equipment.

Water Baby

He swam five miles down the Mississippi River in one hour 8 minutes—nearly twice as fast as any other mark for that distance—and James Lenny is only eight years old!

"Government survey records were consulted for distance," writes James' father from 1240 North Eighty-ninth street, East St. Louis, Ill., "and he was timed by three people not members of our family."

James was a real "water baby." When he was three, his father was teaching older youngsters to swim and James entered the water and imitated them. At seven, when on a fishing trip, James started to swim a quarter of a mile into the river He felt so strong he kept going until he reached the other bank, a distance of a mile. People doubted his feat, so he repeated it, timed by newspaper reporters in 19 minutes, better than the world's record!

Bill's Tomatoes

"My father used to be a farmer," says William Wainwright, 10, "but now we live in town and I have only a small place in back of the house in which to plant a few things." Bill can't grow very much—not if he raises any more tomato plants like his one this year. It was 9 feet 10 inches tall!

As the plant shot up, Bill tied it to the house. "But soon," he writes from 10 School street, Ayer, Mass., "it got so tall my dad had to tie it for me."

At that, the plant was put in late in the year, and dug up so it could be photographed before it had stopped growing. Otherwise, Bill doesn't know how high it would have sprouted. Even so, it gave him two dozen tomatoes—12 large and 12 small.

Meet Mary

Parade: I was born in New Bedford, Mass., on the seventeenth day of July, 1921. When I was four, my family moved to Swannanoa, N. C., where we lived for eight years. I've lived in the following places, also, for a period of one year each: Canada, Maine and Asheville, N. C. Then we moved to Kings Mountain, where we have made our home for the past three years.

I have two brothers and two sisters. One brother is in China, as are both my parents. I'm a twin, but my twin sister is dead. My mother is a twin and my grandfather (mother's father) also is a twin. All of my ancestors were from Paris, France.

My hobbies are collecting stamps, autographs, postcards, pix of Horace Heidt, my favorite orchestra leader, and of Barbara Stanwyck and Ronald Reagan. I have at least one postcard from 24 States and from eight foreign countries.

Has Readeress Stolts tried writing first to foreign boyzngals whose names appear in the column? Foreign youngsters who write Parade see it only when it's sent them by friends over here as Parade does not appear regularly in any overseas country.—Ed.

Okay on Cold Nights

Parade: I would like to express my opinion of swing. It is all right to dance to on a cold night. Otherwise, it's no good. In fact, it's bad. I would very much like to see a jitterbug compete with an African Fuzzy-Wuzzy. But it's not surprising to find modern youth so cramheaded. Jitterbugs would rather go to Joe's dance hall and do the Boogy-Woogy than go to a Saturday night's opera. I am 11 and hope I will not be a swing victim.

DONALD OLIVER.

Cornell Routs Dartmouth, 35 to 6, Before 16,000

Ithacans Run Wild, Remain Undefeated

Victors Spread Scoring Activities Over Every Period; Landsberg Stars

Special Dispatch to The Post

Hanover, N. H., Nov. 18.—Cornell's Big Red team ran and passed for more than a quarter mile as it protected its clean gridiron slate by overwhelming the hapless Dartmouth Indians, 35-6, today before an overflow crowd of 16,000, the largest in Memorial field history.

The powerful Ithacans spread their scoring over every period and even with third stringers in action kept their courageous rivals under control until the final quarter, when a too eager replacement interferred with a 33-yard pass that was ruled good for a first down on the 7-yard line.

Scores From 2-Yard Line

Only one of the other eleven passes the desperate Indian's attempted was completed and the first of the five that were intercepted started the Ithacans' on their first touchdown march.

Early in the game, Mort Landsberg, who accounted for much of Cornell's total of 327 rushing yards, snagged a pass on Dartmouth's 38 and went over from the 2-yard line after speedy Hal McCullough averaged 5 yards on as many off-tackle slams and Kirk Hershey contributed six more on an end-around dash.

Hershey set up the second touchdown by completing an 18-yard pass from McCullough and putting the ball in position for Mal Baker to score on a 15-yard reverse. Before the half ended, Cornell cut loose with another furious drive that ended when Baker caught McCullough's pass outside of the Dartmouth end zone.

The Indians opened the last half with their second team in action, but the regulars were rushed back into action after Mike Ruddy, substitute quarterback, brought a 50-yard march to a successful ending by ploughing from the 2-yard line.

70-Yard Drive

Although rested, the Dartmouth regulars were unable to cope with the Ithacans when they got rolling from their own 12. Baker, Hershey, Landsberg and McCullough each ran once in that order for a total of 70 yards and the last 18 were wiped out when the Cornell passing ace tossed an 18-yard scoring pass to Hershey.

The Ithacans appeared satisfied with a 28-0 lead; for they opened the final period with a mixture of second and third stringers. But when Johnny Kelley, an early replacement for Capt. Whit Miller,

Tulane Earns 25-0 Decision Over Lions

By the Associated Press

New York, Nov. 18.—The Tulane Tidal Wave swept over Baker Field for three touchdowns in two periods today, then settled back to a conservative ripple for the balance of a ball game which wound up with the unbeaten Southerners on the proper end of a 25-0 score against Columbia.

Red Dawson's giant linemen, averaging better than 200 pounds, charged and blocked to open up inviting holes in the outweighed Lions' defenses. Through those holes hard-running backs like Bobby Kellogg, Harry Hays, Fred Golden, Fred Cassibry, Buddy Banker and Monette Butler, to name only half a dozen, went pouring along for almost as much yardage as they wanted.

246 Yards Enough

What they wanted, it finally turned out, was a net of 246 yards. Against that impressive total of rushing gains alone, the Lions could offer only stubborn but definitely outclassed resistance which left the 25,000 spectators convinced that Columbia, for this year at least, had made a grave mistake in scheduling the Southeastern Conference powerhouse. With the "A" team in the game, Tulane went 40 yards in ten plays for its first score and 15 yards in three for its second in the opening quarter. Team "B" took over at the start of the second quarter and made 30 yards and a touchdown in three plays.

With Kellogg, Banker and Cassibry accounting for the touchdowns in that order and Kellogg tacking the extra point onto his tally, that made it 19-0. Apparently that was enough, for through the entire third period the Dixie Green-Shirts seemed content to sit on their lead.

Having pushed the Lions back further and further as the second half progressed, Tulane finally moved to its final score in the last minute of play. With a makeshift lineup operating, the Southerners started from their 34 and, seven plays later, sent Butler slicing through from the 7-yard line. Twelve seconds were all that was left when he hit pay dirt.

The Green Wave wasn't sup-

New York U. Punt From End Zone Precedes Georgetown Touchdown

Two plays after Arthur Schillig got away the punt pictured here from behind the goal posts, Georgetown stormed back for the game-winning touchdown in the first quarter at Yankee Stadium yesterday. Schillig narrowly succeeded in getting the punt off ahead of the charges of the Georgetown tackles, Earl Fullilove (36) and Joseph Daniels (18)

Loyola is Crushed By Cardinals, 34-0

By Bill Burnett

Fourteen seniors were celebrating their last home game of football for Catholic University yesterday at Brookland stadium but the spotlight of the Cards' 34-0 shellacking of Loyola of the South was centered on a 20-year-old junior, Pete Sachon, regular quarterback.

The 168-pound native of Coaldale, Pa., opened C. U.'s five touchdown barrage in the second quarter with a 46-yard aerial to Rocco Pirro, and before he was through he had tossed two more touchdown passes good for 18 and 25 yards respectively.

As early as the victory came, it nevertheless brought C. U. back into the win column after its disastrous and streak-breaking loss last week. The quietest crowd of the year, estimated at 4,000, sat in on the lop-sided affair and hardly bothered to yell when the Cards hung up their touchdowns.

Throughout the initial period the Flying Cards were for the most part earth-bound. They held their New Orleans foes on even terms, and by the same token Loyola held them to scant gains. Each club annexed a first down, Rocco Pirro registering C. U.'s with a one-yard plunge to the Loyola 45 after Charley Moutenot's scintillating end run of 9 yards.

It was a pass, Freddy Kykes to Harley Cawthon, that took Loyola's soliary first down a few plays later after its ground advance had been plugged consistently by Catholic. On the last play of the period Hank Brostek was thrown for a 9-yard loss by Loyola's Russ Freel to the Wolf Pack's 46, but that loss only served to intensify the storm the Cards had been brewing.

Coach "Moon" Mullins sent a near-complete Loyola line-up into the game to start the second stanza

Northwestern Beaten, 7-0, By Ramblers

By the Associated Press

South Bend, Ind., Nov. 18.—Notre Dame's Irish, with two members of the "shock troops" legion touching off the fuse, explosed their might in the final minutes today for a touchdown which whipped Northwestern's Wildcats, 7 to 0.

Before 53,000 spectators, who huddled in the murky darkness and a steady drizzle, Notre Dame blasted loose in the last five minutes with the lone score of the contest, Milt Piepul going over for a touchdown after brilliant runs by two substitute Irish backs, Bob Hargrave and Steve Juzwik.

Hargrave, a third-string quarterback, caught a Northwestern punt on the Notre Dame 9-yard line and twisted and dodged 50 yards before being nailed at the Northwestern 41. Two offside penalties helped the Irish drive to the Wildcat 29. At this point Juzwik, a fourth-string "unknown" reeled off 22 yards around left end before being forced out of bounds by Bill DeCorrevont. Milt Piepul crashed to the 2-yard line, then over for a touchdown. When a teammate fumbled on the placement for point, Zontini ran the ball over the line to convert.

Even then Northwestern, outplayed through most of the game, fought back desperately. Don Clawson returned the ensuing kickoff 44 yards to the Notre Dame 36, but Notre Dame produced a tight line

Ghecas Reported As Resting Well After Concussion

Special Dispatch to The Post

New York, Nov. 18.—Halfback Lou Ghecas, hero of Georgetown's winning touchdown in the New York University game today, was resting easily in St. Vincent's Hospital tonight after being removed from the field with a brain concussion.

Hospital attaches declared Ghecas' condition to be not serious, but doubted that the player would accompany the team back to Washington tomorrow night.

Ghecas, who scored on a 31-yard pass play in the opening quarter, was injured in the second period while making a tackle.

Terps Lose, 13-0, on V.M.I. Dash, Drive

By Al Hailey.

A Staff Correspondent.

Forman Field, Norfolk, Va., Nov. 18.—A breath-taking 73-yard touchdown run by Sophomore Bosh Period in the second period and a 28-yard drive in the last four minutes of play gave a completely outplayed Virginia Military Institute eleven a 13-0 victory over Maryland University here today before 8,500 spectators.

But for the Terps' tendency to toy with a haphazard passing attack, the score might have been a different story. Led by an amazing display of endurance and aggressiveness by John Boyda, senior halfback, Maryland was in V. M. I. territory almost the entire afternoon.

The Kaydets' first score came when Pritchard, who sings with a college orchestra when he isn't playing football, took Pershing Mondorff's 60-yard punt three minutes after the opening of the second quarter and ran through the entire Maryland team. The jaunt caught the entire Maryland team flatfooted. Mondorff's punt fell on the 27 where Pritchard took it and shot for the sidelines. At his own 45 he cut back in a wide arc to his 40 and then raced to the opposite sidelines, picking up a shield of blockers.

Duke Knocks N. C. U. From Unbeaten Ranks

By Whitney Martin.

Durham, N. C., Nov. 18.—A potent Duke University football team, its offense sputtering and wheezing through two periods, today exploded with a roar in the third quarter to blast North Carolina into the ranks of the defeated and take a long stride toward at least a tie for the Southern Conference crown.

The score was 13 to 3, a fair gauge of the relative merits of two fine football teams, and 50,800 fans, who packed every cranny of Duke Stadium and bulged into temporary stands, straggled away convinced the better team had won.

At that, it took a blocked punt to send the Blue Devils into the lead and to eventual victory. At the half they were a worried, frustrated team, trailing by 3 points and uncertain as to what could be done about it.

Tarheel Strategy Boomerangs

The third period hardly had started before fate, in the person of stocky Tony Ruffa, entered the picture.

North Carolina had the ball deep in its own territory. The crowd, sensing nothing unusual, sat quietly as the ball was snapped to George Stirnweiss, ostensibly for a casual line play.

Suddenly there was a burst of blue through the big white line and the ball, leaving Stirnweiss' foot on a quick-kick, boomed into Ruffa's barrel chest and bounded

Bowie, Md., Nov. 18.—J. B. Partridge's Sandy Boot ran like a heel for a half mile today. At the end of a mile and a sixteenth he looked the part of a pair of golden slippers. At least, that was the feeling of those among the 12,000 present who wagered on the 6-year-old gelding to win the annual running of the $5,000 added Prince Georges Autumn Handicap.

The son of Boot to Boot and Sanda, an aptly-named critter if there ever was one, finished three parts of a length in front of the Belair Stud's Bosley after virtually running over horses in the

Koshlap-to-Ghecas Pass Fetches Goal In First 3 Minutes

New York, Nov. 18.—Georgetown's brilliant football cast completed a triumphant two-year run this afternoon by staging a grand finale on the turf of Yankee Stadium—a clever 14-0 production that sent New York University down to defeat.

Before 19,000 amazed New York fans, a zealous Georgetown team, eager to hurdle the last barrier to a second consecutive undefeated season, struck with the opening kick-off and rigged the scenery for the winning touchdown three minutes after the start of the game.

Georgetown reached high for fame this afternoon and found it in the accuracy of Jules Koshlap's passing skill. With a touchdown heave to Lou Ghecas early in the opening quarter, Koshlap established the Hoyas in a lead that they not only defended but increased with a second-quarter goal.

Unbeaten since 1937, triumphant in 16 of their last 17 games, and tied only by Syracuse, Georgetown left the field at the final whistle today acclaimed by all Manhattan as one of the football powers of the Nation. The Hoyas had outplayed, outsmarted and—yes, even outclassed an N. Y. U. team that most of the Fall had marched in the front rank of Eastern football.

Four Hoya Heroes

Halfbacks Jules Koshlap and Lou Ghecas, End Mike Kopcik and Center Alan Matuza—they were the standout Georgetown heroes, projected into the spotlight from out of the grist of unsung journeymen in the Hoyas' powerful line.

It was Matuza who brought forth the second Georgetown touchdown. This substitute center sent N. Y. U. hopes of ultimate victory crashing when he leaped into the air in the second period, plucked a Violet forward pass off its course, and galloped 45 yards to the goal line with his booty.

Quick thinking by Mike Kopcik, its kicking end, set up the first Georgetown touchdown. The Hoyas won the toss but elected to kick instead of receive so they could take advantage of a wind blowing towards the East goal. Augie Lio's boot boomed down field and landed among a group of N. Y. U. players on the 9-yard line. For some unexplainable reason none interferred with the bouncing balloon and Kopcik swooped down to recover for Georgetown and the Hoyas took the free ball at that point.

Hoya Threat Stopped

It was a play few of the working press had ever seen before. The rule covering the play states that if a kickoff travels more than 10 yards it can be recovered by the kicking team.

From the nine, N. Y. U.'s line—one that matched Georgetown's on defense—stopped the Hoya threat. Four running plays gained only 7 yards, and the Violets then punted. Shilling's kick was downed by Alex Campanis on the N. Y. U. 32. Two plays later Georgetown had the game won.

Koshlap, after picking up a scant yard on an off-tackle thrust to the right side of his own line, faded back. He picked out the speeding Ghecas, and whipped a perfect pass to the fleet halfback. Ghecas took

Grady, Nowaskey Are Stars asColonialsTake Foes at Lawrence, 5,000 Fans Attend

Memorial Stadium, Lawrence, Kans., Nov. 18.—Tom Grady, a fourth-string halfback, and All-American Candidate Bob Nowaskey made George Washington's first invasion of the Big Six territory a successful one today as the Colonials scored early in each half for a 14-7 victory over the University of Kansas before 5,000 fans in massive Memorial Stadium.

A running attack that netted 219 yards with Grady, in a new role of star back, Eddie Wilamoski, Sam Babich and "Fuzzy" Fedora taking turns filing through the gaping holes torn in the Kansas defense by the rugged G. W. line, was responsible for the victory.

A Great Passing Show

On the other hand, the Colonials were bucking one of the great passing shows of the season, an aerial extravaganza by the Jayhawkers that showed 231 yards gained from 17 completed passes, 14 from the talented fingers of Ralph Miller. Time and again the hosts struck through the air, but fumbles and interceptions took their toll and their only score, oddly enough, was a 7-yard dash by Miller in the fourth quarter.

The small crowd was no reflection on the drawing power of the Colonials. It was the result of one of the best games in the Nation being not a hundred miles away—Missouri and Oklahoma—and which had this section of the country wilder than a World Series, or a Kentucky Derby throng. The faithful Kansas fans who turned out were rewarded by a thrilling ball game. The Colonials turned loose a sensational scoring play early in the opening period, and from then on it was an offensive battle. After Wilamoski returned a punt 12 yards to his own 48, on the next play he threw a 10-yard pass to Babich, who ran down to the 20, where he ran into Kansas tacklers and lateraled to Nawaskey, who covered the remaining distance down the side line for the touchdown. Nowaskey added the seventh point from placement.

Fumbles Hurt Jayhawkers

Interceptions and fumbles hurt the Kansas scoring cause as it remained 7-0 at the half, in the third period, Grady who has seen little action this year, picked up 13 yards to the K. U. 48 on the third play of the quarter. Babich carried the ball 7 yards to the 41 and then Grady took it again and on a 41-yard scoring run through the entire Kansas team he was finally clear of tacklers on the 20 and romped over for the score. Nowaskey duplicated his perfect placement boot.

Miller was on the receiving end of a pass from Ed Suagee that was ruled good on interference, and that set up the Jayhawk score in the final period. G. W. protested the play. Miller then faded back to the left side of the field and floated a pass to Ulrich, who caught it on the 10-yard line and was stopped. Sullivan picked up three yards and Miller crossed the dope by going through guard for the score. Chester Gibbens, a five-foot-six, 150-

Columbia, Mo., Nov. 18.—The fighting Missouri Tigers removed Oklahoma from the list of the Nation's undefeated teams and established themselves as prime "bowl" material with a surprising 7 to 6 victory over the defending Bix Six champions before 26,000 in Memorial Stadium today.

The victory, virtually assuring the Tigers the Big Six crown, was scored on the recovery of a blocked punt in the third period of a bruising contest. Bob Orf, tow-headed Tiger end, stepped over the Oklahoma goal line after catching the ball that had bounced 30 feet in the air. Ronald King, a reserve back and outstanding player on the field for the day, place-kicked the deciding point.

71-Yard Drive

Oklahoma, scrapping back fiercely, drove 71 yards for its touchdown in the final period and twice again threatened to pull the game out of the fire. But a missed placement try for extra point by Dick Favor proved fatal to their national championship aspirations.

Paul Christman, Missouri's all-American candidate, was just another ball player in this game. He spent much of the muddy afternoon sitting on the seat of his pants. But while the Sooners were busy hamstringing the glamor boy they were taking a beating from his less famous teammates.

Missouri's vaunted aerial attack was a very minor factor in the upset victory. With Christman bottled, the Tigers gained only 39 yards by the pass route while Oklahoma was picking up 77 through the air, including a 15-yard toss for its score.

Seceptive Running Game

The Tigers sprang a deceptive running game to pile up 157 yards on the ground to Oklahoma's 148. Bob Seymour and Beryl Clark, the Sooners' ball carrying aces, never could sustain a march through the inspired Missouri defense, and seven of the Sooners' 12 first downs were manufactured by a second string backfield. Missouri gained seven first downs.

While he completed a number of piddling passes, Christman's best contribution was a pretty 15-yard run in the second quarter. In the final minutes of the game he committed a fumble that might have proved disastrous, Oklahoma recovering on the 42-yard line, and

Redskins, 3-1 Favorites, Play Cards Today Before 25,000

Chicagoans Featuring Pitt Backs

Goldberg and Patrick Are Scoring Threats; Redskins Welcome Promised Dry Field

Out of the wreck of an already disastrous season a Chicago Cardinal team sprinkled with All-Americans at 2 p. m. today will make a grim effort to salvage a measure of prestige. They will be seeking a victory over the Redskins at Griffith Stadium.

The Cardinals will present a seemingly imposing lineup, featured by the presence of George Goldberg and Frank Patrick, graduated backfield stars of Pitt; Ki Aldrich, famed All-American center from Texas Christian U.; Jack Robbins, clever forward passer from Arkansas, and a host of other former college headliners.

But current odds are 3 to 1 that the Cardinals will take a licking from the Redskins.

Respects Nevers' Coaching

The odds are based logically enough on the failure of the Cardinals to win more than one of their nine starts in the National League this season and the sensational performances of the Redskins who overran Brooklyn, 42 to 0, in their last outing.

A crowd of 25,000 is anticipated, with the kick-off set for 2 o'clock, a half hour earlier than the customary starting time.

Despite the odds in the Redskins' favor, Coach Flaherty has a wholesome respect for the ability of the Cardinals, coached by Ernie Nevers. "Most of the games they have lost have been tough ones that might have gone the other way if the Cardinals had been favored with the breaks," commented Flaherty. "We're not underestimating the Cardinals."

Expect Versatile Attack

The Cardinals have gone about their practice chores diligently at Griffith Stadium for the past week in an attempt to gain a competitive peak today. They outgained the Giants last Sunday at New York while losing, 17 to 7, and Nevers is hopeful that they will show a more versatile attack against the Redskins.

To that end, Nevers has imported Jack Robbins from Chicago. Robbins, his ace passer, joined the team yesterday after being absent from the lineup for several weeks with a shoulder injury. He will play today as long as he shows no effects of the injury.

Robbins' passes are the chief concern of the Redskins, but scarcely of less concern than the off-tackle smashes of Goldberg, whom professional coaches have labeled "the fastest-starting back in football." When Robbins is not in the Cardinals' lineup, the passing duties will devolve on Frank Patrick, Goldberg's former Pitt colleague, who will also share the ball carrying.

Fair Weather Predicted

The weather man's promise of a dry field for this afternoon was gratefully received by the Redskins' coaches. On a dry gridiron, Flaherty hopes that he will be able to turn loose the sensational attacking force of Andy Farkas-Dick Todd-Sammy Baugh, which scored seven touchdowns last week against the Dodgers.

Hewing to custom, Flaherty will not send Baugh into the starting lineup but will reserve him until the start of the second period. The offensive duties at the start will rest with Farkas and Franie Filchock. Jimmy Johnston and Wilbur Moore are expected to round out the starting backfield.

Todd and Baugh are due to make their appearance as the Redskins' offensive team at the opening of the second period unless injuries force their presence earlier. Baugh may not have one of his favorite targets for passes, End Wayne Millner, who is nursing a bruised instep and may not figure in the game.

Today's game with the Cardinals is the Redskins' first battle with the Chicago club since 1937, when the Cardinals scored a 16-0 upset victory at Griffith Stadium, thanks to the pass catching of Gaynell Tinsley.

Maryland Plays Syracuse Here Next Thursday

After 47 years of collegiate football activity, Maryland University will play its first Thanksgiving Day game at College Park Thursday, meeting Syracuse at 11 a. m. It will be the last game of the season for the in-and-out Terps.

Though a participant in many Turkey Day games in previous years, all Maryland games on that date have been out of town. The longest series was with Johns Hopkins. A November 30 engagement with Washington and Lee was originally slated this year but called off due to schedule difficulties. President Roosevelt's moving up the Thanksgiving date left the Terps with an unexpected Thanksgiving home game on their hands.

Returning Hoyas Face Loud Welcome

Georgetown's triumphant football team will receive a rousing welcome tonight at Union Station when a special train from New York deposits the 14-0 conquerors of New York U. in Washington.

The Hoyas, unbeaten for the second consecutive season, will board their special train at 6:30 p. m. tonight in company with the Georgetown Band which performed between the halves yesterday. Georgetown officials last night announced that students would be given special permission to greet the team.

Roller Hockey Game

The second season of roller skating hockey will start today at Capitol Casino Roller Ring when two local clubs, Washington Blackhawks and Capitol Casino Club face off at 1:30 p. m. A crowd of between 600 and 1,000 is expected to attend.

Rocco Pirro (No. 72), co-captain of Catholic U.'s Cardinals, took credit for the first touchdown in the Cards' 34-0 beating of Loyola of the South yesterday. He took a pass from Pete Sachon, evaded the above cluster of Wolves at the 40-yard line, and raced over the goal on the first play of the second period and that, probably was a fatal mistake. One bullet-like aerial, what?? Sachon to Rocco Pirro, put the Cards out in front for the first time on the first play of the period. The ball pinned itself to Pirro's jersey on the 40 and he carefully paced the distance to the goal, side-stepping the Loyola safety, Floyd Boutte, on the 10. Carmen Pirro's placement was as effortless and accurate as usual.

Fumble Sets Up Another

Catholic U.'s appetite seemed to be whetted by that lead and it went out to increase it as fast as possible. A fumble by Dykes set up the second of the three second-quarter scores, End Martin Donovan falling on the errant leather on the Loyola 32. Cachon got up to the 25 despite Dykes, and then came the next pay-off aerial. Sachon again was on the throwing end, and this time it went to Joe Carrig, who had only to lay down in the end zone. No one was surprised when Carmen Pirro again converted.

Even that 14-0 advantage failed to satisfy the Cards, victims of a cruel upset at the hands of St. Anselm last week. The Wolf Packs' highly regarded Joe Fracchia was turned loose to pass as he pleased but he wasn't in the class of the reserve backfield sent in by Coach Dutch Bergman. It was four plays from the half-time whistle, then, that Substitute Halfback Frank Krawczell faded back from the Loyola 44 and dropped a perfect ringer in the arms of Substitute End Vic Miller on the 10. The latter went over easily and a substitute tackle took Carmen's place in the conversion department but missed the point.

20-Yard Dash

The second half was just starting when the Cards started what appeared to be their first touchdown drive along the ground. Pirro tripped 24 yards around right end to the Wolf 47, Brostek added 23 more around left end, and Moutenot went for 15 around the other wing. A final burst of 4 yards by Pirro put the ball on the Loyola 4, but there the drive stopped. Three blasts at the Loyola wall lost 2 yards, and Fraccia had a chance to kick out.

Taking the ball on the 40 Brostek again advanced along the ground on a 20-yard dash. From the 20, though, it took another Sachon pass to ring up the fourth 6-pointer. Wingman Donovan received, and Carmen Pirro, back in the game, successfully converted, to make the total 27-0.

One reason the New York Giants are a power in the National League may be the fact that they are carrying only three first-year players . . . the Chicago Cardinals had to change all of their signals after trading Ken Berlim to the Redskins, the team they meet today . . . Dick Todd is one of the five players in the league who weighs less than 170 pounds . . . Frank Dobson to coach the Pittsburgh Pirates in the pro league next season is still a good bet . . . even in the event Dick Harlow does not transfer from Harvard to Maryland, the 1940 Maryland coach will not be Dobson . . . there were 21 teams in the National Football League in 1926 and only eight in 1932 . . . Green Bay is the only small town to survive as a league member . . . originally, Green Bay gained its financial backing when an enthusiastic citizen sold his expensive automobile to provide ready cash.

Terps Lose, 13-0, to V. M. I. Dash, Drive

ing Maryland tackler, with a beautiful block at the Maryland 12. Pritchard scampered across the goal line, then held the ball while Nelson Catlett, his sophomore running mate, kicked the extra point.

A colorful crowd in Norfolk's new stadium, Forman Field, howled itself hoarse as the Terps constantly threatened to score while holding the fighting squadron from Lexington back in its own territory. More than 2,000 of the fans were visiting Shriners, here for the dedication of the new Shrine mosque. Seven bands, a drum and bugle corps and a delegation of girl drum majors lent color to what was a heartbreaking picture for the loyal little band of Maryland rooters.

The Keydets, taking advantage of the Terps' lapse of morale following their failure to make their numerous threats count, took the ball on the Maryland 28 in the final minutes of the game and from there marched over. They were helped by an off-side penalty on the Terps, giving them a first down on the Maryland 18.

Shu Climaxed Push

Luther Sexton, on an end around, made it first down for V. M. I. on Maryland's 8. Then Catlett, in two plunges, put the ball on the 1-foot line, and Capt. Paul Shu took it over for the second score. Shu missed the extra point.

Maryland's drive to V. M. I.'s 18 came by way of twelve running plays and one pass. Boyda, the wheelhorse of the Terp attack all afternoon, carried the ball eleven times, accounting for four first downs. Murphy carried the ball once around right end behind perfect blocking for 9 yards and hurled a first-down pass to Dick Shaffer, junior end, for the fifth first down on V. M. I.'s 18.

Then the Terps took to the air and lost their scoring chances. A pass to Beamer fell incomplete after Murphy lost 2 at right end.

A shovel pass from Murphy to Frank Skotnicki, right half, picked up half a yard, and then Murphy's pass to the same man went wild over the goal line. V. M. I. took the ball on its 20 and began to go places.

Poor Aerials Costly

Six times Maryland fought its way inside the Keydets' 40-yard line in the first half. Twice they were at the 26 and once at the 28, but their tendency to take to the air for their scoring punch proved their undoing.

The Keydets were forced to punt from behind their own goal line three times in the first quarter. They could make but one first down in the first half, while Maryland piled up five. Then in the second half, Maryland picked up 13 while V. M. I. was making four.

Maryland, prepared to fight what was supposed to be an aerial-minded Kaydet eleven at their own game, tried 26 passes. But with their own passers' wildness and V. M. I.'s defense, they completed but 7 for a negligible gain of 52 yards. V. M. I. tried but four and completed none.

The Keydets had possession of the ball but three times in the third quarter and were forced to get rid of it by punts each time. They came to life in the last few minutes as a tired Terp eleven began to sag.

pound back, entered the game and dropkicked his tenth goal out of 11 attempts in two seasons. Last year he was second in the country, with seven for seven.

Nowaskey's fame was apparently slow to reach Kansas. On the first play, they tried his end and Dick Amerine was tossed for a 6-yard loss. The Kansas end plays were run around the other end from then on.

Defensive honors were easily Nowaskey's for the day, but pass interceptions by Batson and Babich, the latter on the 6-yard line, and a fumble recovery by Jones were all defensive gems for the Colonials. Babich also intercepted one in the end zone and ran it out. The dependable back, Murphy Booth, took care of the Kansas line, when they reached the secondary.

Frank Bukaty figured in the early Kansas passing. He completed three for sizeable gains before Murphy took over. The hosts passed their way to the 27 in the first period, and in the second quarter they were hot on the trail of a score before Babich put his big paws in the way of Miller's bullet pass, which Renko was waiting for. Kansas tried a pass play with seven seconds to play, and it was good for 25 yards, but they needed 90. Kansas passes filled the air the last few minutes, but the furtherest they advanced was to the G. W. 45.

Wilamoski Gained

Wilamoski covered a majority of the ground for the Colonials, with half a dozen of his best averaging over 10 yards, while Fedora and Grady were not far back.

The half-time entertainment was provided by the great 90-piece Kansas Band, that entertained 15,000 fans in the District this year, and which has been supplemented by a girl drum major who won the national high school drum major honors.

Gilley Fights Theodorescu

Charlie Gilley, red-headed Baltimore scrapper, was substituted for Joey Spangler yesterday in one of two eight-round battles to headline the regular fight show at Turner's Arena tomorrow night. Spangler, slated to take on Milo Theodorescu in the latter's first appearance in this vicinity, was forced out of the bout when a doctor's examination revealed his ankle was sprained too badly to take part.

The other eight-rounder will be for a mythical "Colored Heavyweight Championship of the District." In this one it will be Al Hart, 220-pounder from the D. C. Barracks, squaring off with Killer Lamar. Both boys are from the southwest section, and the match is in the nature of a "grudge" duel.

To the winner will probably go a battle with Jim Howell, the New York Negro who last month knocked out Hart in the fifth round of their scheduled eight-rounder. Curtis Sheppard, another outstanding colored scrapper, has also been mentioned as a possible opponent for the victor.

In supporting bouts the highlight will probably be Frankie Will's battle with El Brookman, roughhouse fighter, in a special six-rounder. Wills holds one victory over Brookman already, a close decision last spring.

Al Gilbert goes against Art Lind in another six and the program will be completed sometime today with a four-round opener.

Williams Fights Off Rally, Downs Amherst, 16 to 8

By the Associated Press

Williamstown, Mass, Nov. 18.—Williams fought off a desperate last-period attack by Amherst today and scored its first victory in four years over the Lord Jeffs, 16 to 8, before a crowd of 8,000.

Two sustained marches, one of 72 yards and the other for 61, brought Williams nine points in the first half. The second march in the second period bogged down on the Amherst 12-yard line, but it was not entirely fruitless for Shaun Meehan booted a field goal for three more points.

G. U. Back Hits Line and Vice Versa

Ben Bulvin (3), of Georgetown, hit the N. Y. U. line and was hit by the N. Y. U. line on this play in the second half at Yankee Stadium yesterday. But the game had a happy 14-0 ending for the Hoyas the ball at arm's length in full stride on the Violets' 20, and cut to the sidelines, where Kopcik removed Galu, the N. Y. U. defensive halfback from his path with a savage block.

Lio then place-kicked the first of his two extra points, and for the N. Y. U. rooters the game might as well have been terminated right then and there. For, with the exception of a final-period 56-yard march from its own 14 to the Georgetown 30, N Y. U. didn't even make a threatening gesture toward the Georgetown goal line, which has been trampled by foemen feet only three times all season.

Trying frantically to connect on long passes, N. Y. U. threw Georgetown its second touchdown early in the second quarter. Matuza hopped in front of a toss from N. Y. U.'s star back, Mikula, on the N. Y. U. 45 and sped unmolested across the Violet goal, accompanied by three unneeded blockers.

Lio banged over his second placement and Georgetown completed a season the Hilltop will never forget.

It was a New York University team its coach, Mal Stevens, rated the best in his reign at the Violet school. It was a big, tough and rugged club that had beaten Colgate and Carnegie Tech easily and had outplayed undefeated North Carolina for three periods only to lose on mental relapses. It also was a team that last Saturday offered more than a little opposition to Missouri which Grantland Rice described as "the country's best eleven" on the afternoon of November 11 when it beat the Violets, 20-7.

But this N. Y. U. team that hadn't been scoreless in any previous 1938 game couldn't get inside G. U.'s 15-yard line; couldn't at any time click with the passing attack that nearly upset the Tarheels and worried the Missourians.

On offense the Violets were all but helpless. Georgetown's hard-charging and magnificent line bottled up the vaunted N. Y. U. backs—all save Ed Boell, injured ace who didn't play at all—held them to 64 yards rushing and 59 yards passing.

They let the desperate Violets take the chances and when N. Y. U. made a mistake, Georgetown was quick to take advantage. Five Violet passes the Georgetown team intercepted and once it scooped up an enemy fumble.

From the opening kick-off the splendidly coached Hilltop team which was making its biggest game of the year its best performance, didn't miss a trick.

Georgetown made only three first downs during the game and only one until the closing minutes of the final quarter, while the Violets showed spasms of violence that brought them eight. But on the principle that a smart team doesn't need to work hard, first downs were no comparison of the team's strength.

The Hoyas intercepted five of N. Y. U.'s 20 passes and gained 96 yards running them back. They recovered a fumble to stop one threat. Twice they smothered N. Y. U. passers who challenged fate by attempting to throw on fourth down.

With its 14-0 margin Georgetown was content to coast and its only real threat in the last half was a drive from midfield to N. Y. U.'s 15 in the final period, but it failed on a feeble field goal effort by Ben Bulvin from the 23.

Terp Frosh Rout Naval Base Eleven

Maryland Yearlings Have Field Day, Winning, 27 to 0

A Staff Correspondent.

Naval Operating Base, Norfolk, Va., Nov. 18.—Maryland University's freshman eleven had a field day here today as they romped to a 27-to-0 victory over the Naval Training Station's eleven.

The Frosh staged their goal rush in the first half only, driving over, around and through the Navy lads with the greatest of ease. A 70-yard jaunt in the second period by Joe Hoopengardner, quarterback, highlighted the Frosh touchdown parade.

Hoopengardner opened the scoring on the second Frosh play, tearing through the entire Naval eleven for 34 yards. Louis Chacos, fullback, dove over from the 1-yard line hardly three minutes later for the second score. At the opening of the second period, Right End Mark Seward intercepted Naval Halfback Crewes' pass on the Navy 5 and went over for the touchdown.

Princeton Breaks Loose in Last Period to Whip Yale, 13-7

'Big 3' Title Is Clinched By Victory

Wells and Peters Pace Attack as Tiger Squad Comes From Behind, Score 2 Touchdowns

By the Associated Press

New Haven, Conn., Nov. 18.—The Princeton Tigers, hobbled for three periods by a fighting Yale eleven, came from behind with two touchdowns in the final quarter to hand Yale its fourth straight defeat, 13-7. This victory clinched the "Big Three" title for the Tigers.

Princeton's two halfbacks, Dick Wells and Bob Peters, did most of the ground gaining on the Tigers' 71-yard march to their first touchdown in the last session. Peters bucked through the line for the touchdown, and Bob Hinchman tied the score at 7-7 with his conversion kick.

Shortly after, the Tigers registered their winning marker when Quarterback Dave Allerdice passed over the goal line from Yale's 18 to Wells for the touchdown. Jim Aubrey's attempted conversion kick went wide.

Yale took the lead in the opening period after capitalizing on a Princeton fumble on the Tigers' 4-yard stripe. On a fake placement, Fred Burr smacked through his right end for the touchdown. Howard Kaye converted.

Neither side could score in the second and third periods, although Princeton staged two menacing passing attacks in the second session, with Allerdice doing most of the heaving. Bob Brooks intercepted one of Allerdice's aerials on the Yale 30, and Sterling Brinkley intercepted a toss by Bob Jackson on the Yale 32.

The ball was in Princeton territory during most of the third period, although in the closing moments of this session, Princeton's passing attack began clicking again.

Interceptions Beat Temple

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, Nov. 18. — Nick Basca, best known as a passer, turned pass defender today and returned two intercepted Temple aerials 72 and 63 yards to give Villanova a 12-to-6 victory over the Owls in their twelfth annual game.

Basca, a hard-running junior halfback from Phoenixville, Pa., brought the crowd of 25,000 to its feet with his two sensational runs. The first, 63 yards, accounted for the Wildcats' second quarter touchdown. Then with the score deadlocked at 6-6 as a result of a pass play that gained 90 yards, Basca pulled another Temple pitch out of the air late in the fourth period and sprinted 72 yards to Temple's three before he was pulled down from behind.

The Wildcat, injured by Andy Tomasic's desperate tackle, might have crossed the goal line himself on his second run, had not one of his own teammates run in front of him. His effort was sufficient, however, for his substitute, Ad Worthington promptly fired a short pass to Buzz Howlett for the winning touchdown.

Temple scored its touchdown in a play that equaled Basca's runs. Forced deep in their own territory by Howlett's quick kick, the Owls eventually took the ball on their 10.

Rutgers Defeats Springfield, 17-7; Remains Unbeaten

New Brunswick, N. J., Nov. 18 (AP).—Rutgers defeated Springfield, 17-7, before a crowd of 10,000 today to maintain its undefeated record and stretch to 13 its two-season string of games without a loss.

Sparked by the passing of Art Gottlieb and the ground play of big Bill Tranavitch and Vinnie Utz, the Scarlet tallied a field goal in the second period and two touchdowns in the third.

The Springfield score came 1 minute before the end of the game and climaxed an aerial drive put on after the Rutgers third team had come into the game.

McDonald Celebrates Return to Line-up By Scoring Three Touchdowns and Passing To Another; Clark Stands Out for Losers

By the Associated Press

Cambridge, Mass., Nov. 18.—Inspired by the return of their free-wheeling captain, tearing Torby MacDonald, Harvard's fighting football forces rolled over New Hampshire's outweighed, outmanned eleven, 46 to 0, today before 15,000 fans at Harvard Stadium.

Besides scoring three touchdowns, MacDonald celebrated his return to action after weeks of injury-enforced inactivity by passing for one other touchdown and setting up a fifth with an interception.

New Hampshire's only two shows of offensive strength were engineered by Stacey Clark and Harold Hall, a pair of rabbit backs. These were made in the second and third periods after Dick Harlow sent in almost every man on the Harvard squad. Once the wildcats marched to the Crimson 18 and another time they reached the 16, but both times Harvard held.

The Crimson gained 18 first downs to 6 for New Hampshire, rolled up 320 yards net from scrimmage compared to 61, and completed five of six passes for 102 yards against two completions in 21 attempts and a gain of 24 yards.

Colgate Loses To Syracuse

Syracuse, N. Y., Nov. 18 (AP).—A Syracuse team hitherto without a major victory spread itself on one big last-period scoring march today to repulse its traditional rival, Colgate, 7 to 0.

Some 28,000 persons saw the Orange players shake off their seeming lethargy and lumber along 77 yards to the score, then quell with pass interceptions a furious Colgate aerial counterattack.

Syracuse gathered itself for its single mighty effort after three periods of alternate Colgate aerial threats and monotonous punting duels. Neither team had moved far in running attacks.

A lateral from Bob Heald to Leo Canale for 12 yards began the offensive deep in Syracuse territory. Dick Banger, stealing Colgate's stuff, tossed a 31-yard forward to Hank Piro to speed the march along. From here it was ponderous going, with a 5-yard penalty and a fumble recovered by its own side hindering the Orange progress.

Swarthmore Routs Eagles, 58-0; Ends First Unbeaten Season

Capacity Crowd of 4,000 Watches Quakers Chalk Up 6th Victory; Eberle, Jakle Star

By the Associated Press

Swarthmore, Pa., Nov. 18.—Swarthmore's Little Quakers closed their first undefeated football season in history today by romping to an easy 38-to-0 victory over American University.

A capacity crowd of 4,000 saw the Garnet, tied only by Oberlin, chalk up their sixth victory in seven games by overwhelming the visitors with nine touchdowns, six of them in the second half.

Led by Buzz Eberle and Ed Jakle, the Garnet piled 16 first downs to 6 and gained a total of 431 yards to 103. The visitors threatened only once, reaching the Swarthmore 9 in the second period before Al Roy intercepted a pass to avert danger.

Eberle, Weltmer and Hannum scored two touchdowns each for the Garnet. Johnny Hunn, Jakle and Tom Mawhinney got the others.

The visitors temporarily stopped the Garnet at the start of the game, but after an exchange of punts Swarthmore drove 42 yards for its first touchdown, Huhn bucking over from the six-inch mark.

In the second period Eberle sprinted 36 yards around end for the second touchdown while Jakle went off tackle for 13 yards to give the Garnet 20-0 edge at half time.

Despite the substitution of the entire Swarthmore squad in the second half the Garnet turned the game into a rout.

Jakle's 24-yard forward pass to Weltmer, a 46-yard forward lateral, Jakle to L. Jones to Mawhinney, and Hannum's five-yard plunge added three more six-pointers in the third quarter. In the last period Hannum's four-yard line buck, Eberle's 10-yard dash, and a 20-yard aerial, Huhn to Weltmer, accounted for three more touchdowns.

Penn Beaten By Michigan; Harmon Star

Quakers Lose, 19-17, In Hard-Fought Game at Philadelphia

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, Pa., Nov. 18.—Michigan nipped Pennsylvania, 19 to 17, today, but the football game, a thriller right down to the finish, was just a backdrop to the brilliant duel staged by two of the year's finest backs in any league—Tommy Harmon and Frank Reagan.

This pair of aces, Harmon, the Michigan flyer, and Reagan, the Quaker quarterback, played out their string to just about a tie in a gaudy battle of triple-threaters as 57,000 of the faithful cheered them on in perfect Indian summer weather.

The "break" in Harmon's favor came when he converted what appeared a 15-yard loss into a sprinting, swerving 65-yard gallop for a third quarter touchdown. Before the crowd had even settled down in their seats at the start of the second half, Michigan had taken the kickoff on its own 35 and Harmon started a sweep to the left.

Brilliant Running

Here it was that Reagan's support failed. Three times his teammates missed sure tackling shots at Terrific Tommy—Harmon's path was blocked to the left, so he calmly turned around, and as Penn defenders chased him, he dashed all the way back to his own 20-yard line before heading in the right direction again. Hastily formed interference carried him past his pursuers, and suddenly there he was in the clear, off and running for what spelled the difference between victory and defeat.

Even with that beautiful piece of running, however, Harmon didn't have a thing on Reagan, who was as fine a back today as the Quakers have seen in years. Where Harmon scored two touchdowns, passed for a third and kicked an extra point, Reagan tallied one six-pointer and spear-headed marches of 92 and 73 yards, before bowing out in the closing minutes, injured but still wanting to fight.

Their Average on Runs

Where Harmon gained 202 net yards in 29 rushes with the ball for an average of 6.1 per crack, Regan picked up a net of 85 yards in 13 tries for a 6.5 yard average.

Reagan completed 14 passes in 28 tries for 188 yards, and gave a performance at quarterback, particularly in the Quakers' 92-yard touchdown drive in the third period, in which there wasn't a flaw. The Quakers used 13 plays in that drive, and Reagan was in on ten of them, picking up 35 yards on the ground and passing for 41 more, before he sliced inside right end for the touchdown.

Nebraska Noses Out Pitt as Sophs Star

Cornhuskers Win, 14-13, With Francis And Rohn Heroes; Good Punting Keeps Panthers Bottled Up in Late Stages

By the Associated Press

Pittsburgh, Nov. 18.—The victory-hungry Nebraska Cornhuskers checekd a furious fourth-quarter attack and shucked the Pitt Panthers today, 14-13, for their second decision since 1921.

Two sophomores, Fullback Vike Francis and his understudy, Henry Rohn, carried the mail for Nebraska as the Cornhuskers throttled Edgar (Special Delivery) Jones and his mates. The two Nebraskans scored their first collegiate touchdowns, Rohn in the second period and Francis midway in the third.

Herman (Roaring) Rhorig and George Knight, both halfbacks, provided the winning margin, each kicking a perfect placement.

Francis broke away for a spectacular 22-yard dash after Nebraska recovered a Pitt fumble and outran Jones into the end zone. Rohn plunged over from the Pitt 1-yard line for his score.

Cassiano in Farewell

The game marked the final home appearance of Richard "Dandy Dick" Cassiano who, with Guard Harold Klein, was cocaptain today. Cassiano got a thunderous ovation when he came in midway in the fourth quarter. But the Nebraskans, with victory in sight, held the ball for six minutes and as the game ended on the Pitt 26.

For the injury-riddled Panthers George Racum, Bob Thurbon, of Erie, Pa., and Jones were outstanding. Racum tossed a 30-yard pass to Thurbon for the first touchdown in the second quarter and in the final quarter tossed to End John Stahl for a 45-yard gain. A few plays later Kracum crossed the goal standing up.

End Joe Reittinger missed the first attempt at placement as Pitt's center sent back a low pass and Nebraska rushed throug to smother the ball. He made good on the second but it was too late. The Cornhuskers kept Pitt bottled up much of the game through the fine punting of Rohrig, while fumbles spoiled other Panther chances. Pitt fumbled five times and Nebraska four, each recovering one enemy bobble.

First Downs Even

In first downs, each made 10, but the Cornhuskers gained 199 yards rushing to 162 for Pitt. The Pathers evened it by gaining 129 yards through the air to 44 for Nebraska.

It was the fourteenth game of the intersectional series and the second win for Nebraska. Three games ended in 0-0 deadlocks.

Boston College Wins Fifth in Row

By the Associated Press

Boston, Nov. 18.—Vito Ananis, hard-running right-halfback, paced Boston College to its fifth straight victory today by scoring all his team's points in defeating Boston University, 19 to 0, in the annual backyard classic before a Fenway Park throng of 14,000.

Ananis, one of the East's leading scorers with ten touchdowns to his credit, scored early in the opening period on a 5-yard end sweep. He didn't make his second until only 20 seconds remained in the half when he grabbed a 45-yard pass from Charlie O'rourke on the Boston University 4 and crossed into the end zone.

Last-Minute Aerial Gives Army 14-14 Tie

41-Yard Pass by Cadet Hatch Paves Way for Mates to Gain Deadlock

By the Associated Press

West Point, Nov. 18.—Heaved in last-minute desperation, a tremendous 41-yard toss by John Hatch to Harry Heffner, today brought the Army a 14-14 deadlock with favored Penn State. Hatch, whose passing attempts had been stiffled all afternoon by State, reached Heffner on the State 3-yard line, and two plays later, the Cadets scored a touchdown.

Heffner tried tackle for a yard, but was brought down hard and was carried off the field with a wrenched knee. Frank Waddell, who played a good portion of the game in place of Army's brilliant bucking back, Art Frontczak, went through the same spot for the tally, and then Ivan Satten, substitute end, brought about the stalemate with a perfect placekick.

State assumed a 7-0 advantage early in the first period when Walt Cniaz, a tackle, intercepted a partially-blocked pass by Jere Maupin and galloped 45 yards for a touchdown. Ben Pollock replaced Craig White and booted the conversion. As the period neared its end, a kick by State's Lloyd Ickes, was blocked by Jim Rooney, Army guard, on the State 16, where Bill Gillis, Cadet center, picked it up and ran for the touchdown. Frontczak kicked the point, establishing a 7-7 tie.

Ickes atoned for his misplay with a perfect 56-yard run through the left side of the Army line for a touchdown midway in the third session. Again Pollock replaced White to kick the extra point. Army's frantic efforts to salvage a tie were throttled until two minutes remained, and then Hatch contacted Heffner. Earlier in the season, Hatch's pass to Fred Yeager enabled to Army to gain a 6-6 standoff with Columbia.

Don Evans Faces Ernie Dusek in Wrestle Feature

According to one fan who ought to know, the meanest man in the rassle business, Ernie Dusek, will return to the District Thursday night for the inevitable groan show at Turner's Arena.

Dusek, the Nebraskan, who is included among the awe-provoking Dusek brothers, has been called by the arena's most consistent mat spectator the worst villain encountered in 25 years of watching the mat game.

The burly Ernie meets Don Evans, an exponent of the "clean" type of grappling, in the top bout. The match replaces one Promoter Joe Turner had arranged for Nanjo Singh, the "Cobra Cluch" expert.

St. Mary's Fails Madigan, Bows To Rams, 13-0

Fordham Capitalizes on Scoring Chances to Turn Back the Gaels

By the Associated Press

New York, Nov. 18.—The Galloping Gaels of St. Mary's were slowed down to a walk today, and the Rams of Fordham University trotted off with a 13-0 intersectional football victory.

Playing on Coach Ed (Slip) Madigan's forty-third birthday before a crowd of 34,800 the Eastern powerhouse made grand use of two scoring opportunities to stop the men from Moraga for the fourth time in a row in the colorful coast-to-coast rivalry.

After a scoreless first half, the Rams thrust with devastating power in each of the last two periods to tally twice.

The Rams were barely into St. Mary's territory when they ate up 40 yards on a simple pass from Steve Kazlo to Alex Yudikaitis to score in the third period. The fleet end caught the ball 30 yards from the goal, headed for the sidelines, tore away from one tackler and crossed standing up. Kazlo missed the conversion.

The fourth period scoring was based on the same general lines—a quick drive from near midfield with Len Eshmont slipping off left tackle for 28 yards to the St. Mary's 15, and then Don Principe darted through a gap in the middle of the line and trotted the entire distance. Kazlo converted this time with a fine boot.

Carnegie Tech Beaten, 21-0, By Holy Cross

By the United Press

Worcester, Mass, Nov. 18.—The hard-riding Holy Cross Crusaders tagged Carnegie Tech with its fourth football defeat of the season today, 21 to 0, before 28,000 fans who saw the Crusaders register two quick touchdowns in the first period and another in the fourth.

Joe Osmanski, shifty right halfback, accounted for two of the tallies. He opened the scoring in the first period on the second Holy Cross play. Behind perfect interference, Joe circled his left end and reversed his field to sprint 45 yards for a touchdown.

Shortly after that, in the same first session, Tom Sullivan, left halfback, made a similar play around right end and sped 55 yards up the sidelines, with the Carnegie Skibos in full cry, for the second touchdown.

Osmanski hung up the third marker in the final period when he circled his left end and twisted through Tech's secondary for 24 yards and a touchdown. The stage was set for this scoring play when Quarterback Frank Saba intercepted George Muha's forward pass and returned it 26 yards to Carnegie's 24.

SOUTHERN FOOTBALL GAMES:

V. P. I. Scores Upset Victory Over Virginia Before 10,000

Tech Opens Early Drive To Win, 13-0

Cavaliers Are Unable To Get Going Against Rivals; Victors Score Almost at Very Start

Special Dispatch to The Post

Charlottesville, Va., Nov. 18 (AP).—Before a surprised crowd of 10,000 fans, Virginia Tech's football team upset the dope here this afternoon by dowining the Virginia Cavaliers, 13-to-0, to keep clear their record of no defeat in Scott Stadium.

The Blacksburg eleven played heads-up football throughout against a sluggish Virginia team that never seemed to be able to get going.

The Gobblers registered a touchdown before late comers had been seated. Tech's kick-off was fumbled by Gianokas and Lawson recovered on Virginia's 23-yard line. After two futile plunges at the line, Hudson tossed the ball to Thomas, who, in turn, lateraled to Ellison, who cut back and crossed the goal line standing up. Boswell's try for placement was wide.

Gobblers Gain on Kick

Midway the quarter, a 76-yard punt by Hudson, rolling out of Virginia's 1-foot line, hurt the Cavaliers, for on the kick-out the Gonblers again had possession of the ball on Virginia's 23-yard mark. Here the Cavaliers braced, however, and took the ball on downs. Just before the period ended Hudson recovered a fumble by Cordozo on Virginia's 18.

Twice during the second quarter the Cavaliers staged drives which took the ball within Tech's 20-yard stripe, but in each case the ball went over on downs when passes failed to click.

Statistics for the first half, which ended, 6-to-0, in favor of Tech, showed three first downs for Virginia as against one for the Gobblers.

There was no scoring in the third quarter, which was marked by frequent exchanges of punts. Midway the period Warriner intercepted a pass on Virginia's 34 and advanced to the 20, where Virginia braced and took the ball. Back again came the Gobblers when Warriner recovered a fumble on Virginia's 30. Hudson reeled off two first downs, but the rally stalled on Virginia's 8.

Tech Sews Up Game

The Gobblers cinched the contest by scoring a well-earned touchdown early in the final period. After Tech had punted over the Virginia goal line, Neusteder attempted a pass, which was intercepted by Clark. On a reverse Thomas took the ball from Hudson and circled left end for the score. Boswell's placement was good.

Virginia staged a futile drive in the closing minutes, but it ended on Tech's 10-yard line.

posed to have much of a passing attack or a pass defense. Yet the visitors made 46 yards on four completions in 11 tries, setting up two touchdowns on passes, and at the same time held Columbia to a total gain of 8 yards on its 3 completions in 14 tries.

Tied only by North Carolina this year, Tulane reeked power at every turn. Even in the scoreless third period, it seemed they could cut loose at any moment. Instead, they elected to try the middle of the Columbia line, which was playing eight men at the time, and the Lions were able to check that sort of maneuver.

In the Lions' losing effort, Sophomore Fullback Lou Will, of Evansville, Ind., was a 179-pound ball of fire. He played 60 minutes and was a 60-minute pest to the Greenies, both on offense and defense. Herb Maack, sophomore tackle, and Hugh Barber, junior end, also were outstanding for Columbia.

Tennessee Is Pushed to Beat Vanderbilt, 13-0, for 21st Win

Maj. Neyland Praises Commodores; Cafego Not in Game; Sluggish at Start, Vols Take Aerial Route to Victory

By the Associated Press

Knoxville, Tenn., Nov. 18.—Tennessee's Volunteers, rolling along in the role of the Nation's No. 1 football machine and a choice "bowl" eligible, overcame a stubborn Vanderbilt team today to score, 13 to 0, their twenty-first consecutive victory before a crowd of 25,000.

Lacking some of the precision and power that earned most of those victories and battling against an ancient foe who gave no quarter, the orange-clad Volunteers staged a last-half stand to keep their goal line uncrossed.

Tennessee beat Vanderbilt at its own game—passing, and the minus three yards net rushing the statistics showed for the Volunteers told the story. Vanderbilt tried 23 passes. Four of 10 tried by Tennessee's gunners came in a series of seven plays that featured a 61-yard touchdown in the third period.

Playing without the services of its ace quarterback, George (Bad News) Cafego, Tennessee performed sluggishly in the opening half as the Commodores gave the Volunteers their most serious threat of the campaign. Vanderbilt marched 48 yards for a first down at the Volunteers, 2-yard stripe in the second period, but only a great defensive stand thwarted a score that might have turned the tide.

Neyland Lauds Vanderbilt

"We won the ball game," said Maj. Bob Neyland, the Tennessee maestro, "but Vanderbilt was the best team on the field today. I want to congratulate them on the way they played and feel like they deserved the victory."

A Vanderbilt team that had suffered five previous defeats gave the Tennessee squad its stiffest opposition in the last two years. It was a Vanderbilt team that gave the Volunteers their last setback. In 1937 the Commodores won 13-7 and since that reverse Tennessee has trampled all opposition.

Duke Topples Tarheels From Perfect List

Blue Devils Open Up In Third Quarter to Register a Victory

crazily toward the end zone. Bill Bailey, Duke end, smothered it as he rolled into the zone for the touchdown which sent Duke fans into delirium.

The aroused Tarheels came back with an attack which bordered on frenzy, but the tide had turned. Alert Blue Devils intercepted or knocked down passes, smothered the ball carriers, and then launched a counterattack which clinched the game with six more points.

Pound Carolina Line

Early in the fourth quarter Bob Barnett intercepted a desperate pass tossed by Harry Dunkle. He was downed on the Carolina 30, and hitherto unsung heroes began to pound away at the fading Tarheel line. Burly Winston Siegfried and Long Steve Lach burrowed their way straight down the field until Siegfried nudged over from the three. Tommy Prothro's placekick was blocked, but Ruffa's had been good and the 13 points on the scoreboard were final as death.

The Tarheels, pushed around like poor relations on the opening Duke drive of the game, and their own offensive efforts spotty, had taken their three-point lead at the start of the second quarter as Dunkle dropped back to the 36-yard line to kick a neat field goal.

That opening Duke drive boded ill for the Tar Heels. Starting on their 37, with George McAfee and Robbie Robinson running and plunging brilliantly, and a pass from Wes McAfee to Brother George playing no small part, the Blue Devils reached the Carolina 13. There a 5-yard penalty set them back ad they couldn't get into gear again. Ruffa tried a placekick from the 34 but it was wide.

Tarheels Dissipate Break

The Tarheels got a break immediately after this as George McAfee fumbled a punt on the Duke 32 and Bob Smith recovered for Carolina, but the best they could do was to get close enough for Dunkle to try a field goal from the 32, the ball falling short.

Those were the major threats, but the game was peppered with sparkling plays, slashing, twisting runs by Duke's McAfees and Robinson and Seigfried and Carolina's Stirnweiss and Sweet Lalanme. And also with fumbles and other misplays which kept the 50,000 maoning and cheering by turns.

However, it was the clean, vicious tackling and blocking which really stood out, with the work of the ends brilliant. The passers on both teams were hurried and harried by charging ends, with Big Paul Severin, Carolina wingman, a particular thorn to the Duke passers.

Undefeated Spiders Beat Tigers, 26-7

Richmond University's Team Keeps Record Clean; 3,000 Attend

By the Associated Press

Richmond, Va., Nov. 18.—Richmond University's Spiders moved to within one game of an undefeated season when they turned back Hampden-Sydney's Tigers, 26 to 7, in the city stadium this afternoon before a small crowd of 3,000 spectators.

The Spiders did all of their scoring in the first half and the gallant Tigers took command of the situation after the intermission with a courageous exhibition which had friend and foe alike cheering for them when they pushed across their touchdown in the final frame.

It was Syd Walden, a Richmond boy, who went the last 14 yards of a sustained 56-yard offensive, to gain the honor of being the only man to score a touchdown through the Spider line this season. Of course, that forewall was studded with substitutes—the Richmonders used 25 players—but it was a touchdown just the same and it sent the Hampden-Sydney contingent home happy. Walden capped the climax of his heroic role when he added the extra point from placement.

Clemson Stops Southwestern

Memphis, Tenn., Nov. 18 (AP).—Clemson's orange-shirted goliath of the Southern Conference unleashed its touchdown wallop three times in the first half today to defeat a hard-fighting but impotent Southwestern team, 21 to 6, before a homecoming crowd reduced to 5,000 by an unrelenting drizzle.

Before the game was two minutes old, Banks McFadden, Mercury-footed Tiger kicking star, sped around Southwestern's right end 39 yards on a fake off-tackle plunge, maneuvered the secondary out of position and scored the first touchdown standing up.

Plainsmen Recover Fumble for Touchdown; Bengals Outplayed

By the Associated Press

Baton Rouge, La., Nov. 18.—An alert and aggressive Auburn football team took advantage of every opportunity today in outplaying Louisiana State and piling up a 21-to-7 victory over the Bayou Bengals.

After driving 88 yards for a hard-earned touchdown in the second stanza, the Plainsmen intercepted a pass in the third for another score and fell on a fumble behind L. S. U.'s goal for another in the fourth.

57-Yard Run

The Bengals, starting off the game's scoring with their touchdown in the first quarter, a brilliant 57-yard run by Charlie Anastasio, settled down to a poor variety of football that Auburn quickly sized up and easily surpassed during the remainder of the game.

Dick McGowen, whose long kicks were more than matched by L. S. U.'s Gerald Hightower, a promising sophomore breaking into the Tiger starting lineup for the first time, scored Auburn's first touchdown to climax the 88-yard drive, sparked by Deal's steady gains through the line.

Malvern Morgan, Auburn's highly capable center, intercepted a pass on L. S. U.'s 17-yard line in the third period to pave the way for Haynsworth's touchdown plunge for the Plainsmen's second score.

Another Touchdown

In the last few minutes of play, one of McGowen's booming punts backed L. S. U. to its 5-yard line, where Leo Bird stepped back on a fake Statute of Liberty play and handed the ball to Anastasio. Anastasio fumbled behind the goal and Teedle Faulk recovered behind the goal line for a touchdown.

Auburn had L. S. U.'s vaunted areal attack well diagnosed and the Bayou Tigers had to turn to ground plays for any appreciable gains. McGowen placekicked Auburn's three extra points.

Georgia Routs Sou. Carolina

By the Associated Press

Athens, Ga., Nov. 18.—Georgia's late-blooming football power finally found fertile soil in a mediocre South Carolina team today and blossomed with a handsome 33-to-7 victory before 7,000 customers.

The Bulldogs started their score-in-every-quarter drive in the first five minutes when Crashing Cliff Kimsey wheeled 17 yards around right end from his own 35. Jim Fordham took the same route for 30 more and finally took it the final four. McCaskill's kick missed.

Kirt Norton took a Vassa Cate aerial on the Bulldog 46 and galloped across after that kick-off, and Joe Grugan added the point to put Carolina in a 7-to-6 lead.

Cate streaked 95 yards for the second Georgia score and Kimsey, Fordham and Nelson added other touchdowns.

Ramblin' Wrecks Stop Alabama Streak, 6-0

Pass in First Quarter Ends Tide's Dominance of Series Since 1932; 24,000 Witness Tug-of-War Battle

By the Associated Press

Birmingham, Ala., Nov. 18.—Georgia Tech cracked the Alabama jinx today with a 38-yard march in the first quarter for the only touchdown of a thrilling 6-0 triumph before 24,000 fans.

The victory left the Georgians unbeaten in Southeastern Conference competition and was their first over an Alabama eleven since 1932.

Tech struck swiftly for the winning score after Buck Murphy recovered a fumble by John Hanson on the Alabama 38. Wheby, playing right half in place of the injured Billy Gibson, hit guard for 7 and Bob Ison made it first down on Alabama's 24 on an end-around.

Little Johnny Bosch faded back to the 35-yard line and sent a bullet pass to Wheby, who sprinted across from Alabama's 15. Clay missed the point.

That ended the scoring but not the thrills in a game that was much in doubt until the final gun.

Alabama made a desperate march from its 4-yard line to Tech's 27 in the final three minutes, featuring passes from Herky Mosley to Jimmy Nelson, but Tech finally stopped the drive just before the duel closed.

Tech got to the Alabama 9 in the third period on a 31-yard pass from Bosch to Bobby Pair but Hanson ended that threat by intercepting the next pass on his 7. Nelson was the spearhead of the Alabama attack, driving through the tackles and around the ends for 96 yards. He came within a few inches of a score in the second period, when a desperate tackle by Bosch threw him out of bounds after a 36-yard gain.

Bosch was especially troublesome to Alabama on runs from punt formation, picking up 53 yards on a series of brilliant sprints.

Alabama had an edge in ground gained, with 245 from scrimmage and 65 on passes, to Tech's 128 from scrimmage and 97 on passes, but the alert Tech line and secondary kept the Tide well harnessed for most of the game.

By the Associated Press

Lexington, Ky., Nov. 18.—The University of Kentucky Wildcats, holding off a threatening pass attack in the final minute of play, today defeated the University of West Virginia Mountaineers, 13-6, before 9,000 fans.

After three passes from Charley Seabright, Mountaineer quarterback, to Mellace and Hockenberry brought the ball to Kentucky's 13-yard line, Noah Mullins, fleet sophomore back from Versailles, Ky., intercepted a fourth on his own 5-yard line and ran it to his 45. One play later the game ended.

Bullis Prep Routed, 42-6, By Plebe Team

Silver Spring Team Puts Up Good Fight Despite Huge Score

Special Dispatch to The Post

Annapolis, Nov. 18.—Though defeated, 42 to 6, the football team of Bullis Prep School put up a scrappy game against the Naval Academy plebes here today. The plebes had too much man power for the visitors. Substitutions were so numerous and frequent that practically every member of the squad had a chance to show his wares, and the prep players were pretty well used up at the end.

The game marked the finale of the gridiron season at the Naval Academy as far as actual games are concerned, and the plebes finished their assignment in a blaze of glory, winning all six contests of their schedule.

The plebes put over two touchdowns in the first period and then gave way to understudies who were held scoreless by the visitors. During this session, Bullis drove to the plebes' 15-yard line only to lose the ball on downs. The plebe regulars again romped onto the field for the third period, to find the enemy putting up an even tougher defensive fight, although they managed to score one touchdown and added two more points through a safety, when Ringenberg blocked Davis' attempted punt from behind his goal line.

Two fresh groups of players finished the rout in the fourth period.

N. C. State Beats Furman, 12 to 7

Greenville, S. C., Nov. 18 (AP).—North Carolina State eleven struck twice in marches of 64 and 50 yards for two touchdowns to defeat Furman's Purple Hurricane, 12 to 7, today in a Southern Conference game before 7,500 spectators.

The Wolfpack marched to a touchdown in the first period from its own 40-yard line. Watts and Brown ripped off 14 and 32 yards, respectively, on end sweeps, and Watts then circled end to score standing.

In the second period, a fumbled lateral, recovered by State on its 49, set up the second march, Fehley finally scoring from the 4-yard stripe.

Furman scored its lone marker in the third, Hinson blocking State's attempted punt on the 18. Coley, recovered for Furman on the 11, Shetley picked up four yards and then on a reverse handed the ball to Lipscomb who went over.

Maple Leafs In First Place

Toronto, Nov. 18 (AP).—The Toronto Maple Leafs stepped into first place in the National Hockey League tonight by blanking the Detroit Red Wings 3 to 0 on the strength of a late drive. The shutout was Turk Broda's third in four games, the Toronto goalie allowing only one goal to get past him since the season opened three weeks ago.

A neat goal by Jack Church, rookie defense man, late in the second period broke the goal famine and started the Leafs on their march to victory. Syl Apps added a second tally early in the third while Gordie Drillon tacked on another on a freak play some minutes later.

Rangers Win, 3-1, Over Americans

New York, Nov. 18 (AP).—The New York Rangers finally snared their first victory of the National Hockey League season tonight by defeating the New York Americans, 3 to 1, on a third-period scoring burst by the Colyille brothers.

The victory lifted the Rangers into fifth place over the idle Boston Bruins. The Americans, with four straight losses, remained in the cellar.

Right Winger Mac Colville opened the scoring in the third period, while Hooley Smith, Americans, defense man, was serving a penalty.

MID-WESTERN FOOTBALL GAMES:

Iowa's 2 Touchdowns in 4th Period Upset Minnesota, 13-9

50,000 Cheer First Victory Since 1929

Seven of Victors Play 60 Minutes; Kinnick and Prasse Star for Hawkeyes

By the Associated Press

Iowa City, Iowa, Nov. 18.—Iowa's amazing Iron Men, the fairy tale lads of 1939 football, came roaring back with two last-quarter touchdowns in an almost unbelievable finish to stun Minnesota's Golden Gophers, 13 to 9, before 50,000 cheering homecoming fans here today.

The indomitable Ironmen, seven of whom went the route as Coach Eddie Anderson used only 17 players in another sensational gridiron conquest, were battered and beaten for three quarters.

Gophers Took a Lead

Minnesota's crushing power had sent a typical bruising Gopher team into a 9-to-0 lead at the end of the third period. It seemed almost certain that the astonishing exploits of the Ironmen, who went into the battle with victories over three other Big Ten teams and Notre Dame, would be ended by the Gophers.

Iowa's little band of heroes, however, wouldn't say quits.

Doughty Nile Kinnick, who completed his sixth game without relief, took command early in the fourth period. He hurled three forward passes to carry the Hawks 80 yards to a touchdown that shocked the confident Gophers and put Iowa within striking distance of a victory that two minutes previously hadn't seemed possible.

The touchdown pass was a beautiful aerial shot from the Iowa ace to Capt. Erwin Prasse, who caught the ball on the 8-yard line and raced across unmolested. Kinnick calmly dropped the extra point, and the Ironmen were only 2 points behind.

Last 4 Minutes Fatal

The Gophers, struggling desperately now to hold their lead, fought off Kinnick's passing thrusts until the final four minutes.

Again Iowa's lightning struck. Starting from their 21-yard line, the Hawkeys, aided by an interference ruling on a pass, reached the Minnesota 28-yard stripe.

Kinnick, although rushed by hard-charging Gophers, sailed the ball into the end zone, where Bounding Bill Green, substitute Iowa fullback, tucked the ball away.

That play sent some 44,000 Iowans into near hysteria, for it meant the first victory over the Gophers since Iowa won, 9 to 7, in 1929, and the first triumph over a team coached by Bernie Bierman.

Chicago Finally Wins, Trouncing Oberlin, 25 to 0

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Nov. 18.—University of Chicago Maroons, ended a 4-game losing streak during which 260 points were scored against them today by defeating Oberlin, 25 to 0, in the mist and rain at Stagg Field. John Davenport, Chicago fleet dash-man, accounted for three touchdowns and made a 41-yard gallop that enabled Wasem to score the fourth from the three yard line. Wasem failed in his three attempts to convert. Leach, substituting for Wasem, dropkicked the extra point on the fourth touchdown.

The Irish, who piled up 15 first downs to 6 for Northwestern, dominated the contest almost from the start. In the first period they drove to the Northwestern 11, from which point Lou Zontini's try for a field goal was blocked. Later in the period they moved to the Northwestern 18 before losing possession on downs.

In the second period little Ben Sheridan broke away for 52 yards, DeCorrevont saving a touchdown with a smart defensive maneuver that enabled a teammate to get Sheridan from behind. Again, in the third period Notre Dame moved to the Wildcat 18, only to have Northwestern come up with another one of its gallant stands.

DeCorrevont broke away only once, streaking 33 yards in the second period. It was in that period that Northwestern drove to the Irish 28, only to lose its scoring chance through interception of a pass.

46,643 See Ohio State Rout Illinois in Rain

By the Associated Press

Columbus, Ohio, Nov. 18.— Ohio State's rampaging Bucks, picked by preseason dopesters to lose three games, clinched a share of the Western Conference championship today with a 21-0 victory over Illinois before 46,643 rain-drenched homecoming fans.

The battling Illini, perperators of the season's biggest upset two weeks ago when they swept Michigan from the heights, had only one chance today. They neared pay dirt on a thrilling "break" on the opening play by recovering a Buckeye fumble on the Ohio 7. Going to the 3, Illinois lost the ball on downs.

93-Yard March

After halting that threat, Ohio immediately marched 93 yards for a touchdown—the first of three long jaunts into the Illinois end zone.

Halfback Jimmy Strausbaugh climaxed the first Ohio surge by firing a 27-yard touchdown pass to Quarterback Don Scott, who kicked the extra point.

Five minutes later Strausbaugh wound up a 73-yard march by breaking over tackle for 19 yards and another touchdown, and again Scott booted the point.

The third "sleeper-jump" trip, a 75-yarder, came in the third period as Scott tossed a 23-yard pass to End Esco Sarkkinen, who was all alone in the end zone. Tackle Charley Maag added the twenty-first point.

Misses Field Goal

Maag a few minutes before had missed a field goal placement from the 26-yard line.

It was Ohio's fifth Big Ten victory and its sixth in seven games this season.

Although Ohio had only 14 first downs to Illinois' 1, the Bucks rolled up 228 yards from rushing to 80 for the invaders, and also outgained them 73 to 59 yards at passing.

Illinois, unable to crack the huge Buckeye line, resorted to the air in a desperate but futile attempt to score. The Coach Bob Zuppke clan tossed 20 aerials, completing 7, while Ohio intercepted 4.

The Bucks completed 5 of 13 heaves, 2 for touchdowns and 2 others were muffed due to the slippery condition of the ball.

Fullback Jim Langhurst, Big Ten scoring leader a year ago, was forced to drop from the Ohio lineup when he suffered a knee injury early in the first period.

plunging through to the 24 before Missouri braced and held.

The punting of King, a sophmore, was what caused Oklahoma's downfall. Taking over the kicking in the third period, he pushed the Sooners back to their goal line and kept them there until the big break came. He was the hero of the Mizzou campus tonight.

Standing on his own 40-yard mark, King got off a tremendous boot that bounded out on Oakland's 6-yard stripe, and the stage was set. Clark went far back into his end zone to make the vital kick, but he was an eye-wink late in putting his foot to the leather, and it struck both Charles Moser, center, and Bob Orf, end of the charging Missouri line.

Straight up it soared while players of both teams scrambled beneath. Three or four leaped for the precious pellet, and Orf got it. One jump took him over the line as the Missouri home-coming crowd raised the roar.

Purdue Held To 7-7 Draw By Wisconsin

Badgers Hold Lead Into Last Period; Pass Saves Visitors

By the Associated Press

Madison, Wis., Nov. 18.—The University of Wisconsin football team scored a mild upset today when it held purdue to a 7-7 tie before a Badger homecoming crowd of 32,000.

For three and a half periods it appeared as though Wisconsin was due for its first Big Ten victory of the season. However, midway in the final period, Coach Mal Edwards' eleven connected on its passing attack and drove to the game-tying points.

After Lou Brock, Purdue right half, tossed three passes for a total gain of 31 yards, he himself got on the receiving end and scored on a 15-yard pass from Mike Byelene, substitute halfback. Fred Montague, reserve quarterback, booted the game tying conversion.

Wisconsin's score came in the first period on a 4-yard-smash by George Paskvan, fullback, with Teddamos, reserve halfback, kicking the extra point.

Both touchdowns were set up by recovery of opponents' fumbles within the 30-yard line.

Indiana Held To 7-7 Draw

By the Associated Press

East Lansing, Mich., Nov. 18.—Michigan State's Spartans and Indiana's Hoosiers, meeting for the first time in 12 years, traded passes on almost even terms today and ended with a 7-to-7 tie.

The Spartans got the jump on their bigger opponents early in the game with Wyman Davis and Eddie Pearce passing and running their way to a touchdown in the first quarter.

Coach Bo McMillin then sent his passing artist, Hal Hursh, into the game, and Hursh tossed beyond the Spartan ramparts in the third period to even the score. A homecoming crowd of 18,000 saw the two teams struggle through the remaining time on almost even terms.

The Hoosiers ran up 11 first downs and a preponderance of yardage to seven first downs for Michigan State, but their tricky laterals produced fumbles which cost heavily in the pinches, Spartans recovering five of them.

Iowa State Wins First Big Six Game

Ames, Iowa, Nov. 18 (AP).—The Iowa State Cyclones upset the favored Kansas State Wildcats here today to climax their season with an unexpected 10-to-0 victory, their first Big Six triumph of the season.

The Cyclones scored three points on a field goal in the first quarter, added seven on a touchdown in the second and then fought off Kansas State's desperate passing attack in the second half.

Bobby Seaburg, the Cyclones' sophomore firecracker, figured in all the scoring. He booted the field goal, passed to Bill Bliss for the touchdown and kicked the extra point.

The Wildcats completed 11 passes out of 17 tried for a gain of 158 yards. They also made 16 first downs to 12 for Iowa State.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, Nov. 18.—Losers' dressing room.

He'd be coming in soon pretty soon now. And there wouldn't be any trouble getting in his room either. The crowd, the cops, the muggs, the fans, and the mob in general was piled up in front of the other dressing room—Billy Conn's dressing room. The mob goes with a winner. Nobody, particularly, wants to see a loser.

CONSIDINE

It might have been different if he had come close to winning, if enough of those punches had landed on the fresh, cocky face of Conn, and knocked off that brisk, bright, cock-sure stare. But the punches missed. They missed by 2 or 3 inches, which is a lot. And when they missed the fresh Irish kid, younger and smarter and faster, countered cleanly and crisply. The punches opened cuts on his face, and put the cobwebs in his brain and the molasses in his legs. They made him drape his sweaty arms around Conn's, in close, and cock one bleared eye up at the clock. His gloves were like buckets of lead—not that anybody cared. He was licked. He wasn't even close.

Doorman Say 'Tough' Mechanically

So Gus, that was the fellow's name, at least came into his dressing room. His face, raw, flat, leaking a little blood, was encircled with a Turkish towel. His thick, hot, red-blotched body, was covered with a blue satin robe, trimmed in gold. His feet looked big and flat.

Jimmy, the doorman, said, "tough," mechanically, as Gus walked into the empty, echoing room and paced up and down as if waiting for the engines of his groggy energy to subside.

His manager, Joe, was with him. So was Dan, his trainer, and Ray, his second. One or two sports writers, on the way to the winner's room, stopped by. Sports writers, by and large, are pretty sympathetic guys. In a loser's dressing room they never talk very loud. It's a little like a wake. Only a few of them, the tired old hacks or the fresh young ones, even bother to talk to the fighter. The ones who came in to see Gus just stood around. They watched him peel off his robe, his trunks and his heavy protective device, and when he sat on the side of his rubbing table and dropped his head, and the sweat ran off his unshaven jaw, they muttered to his manager, and his trainer.

"Laid off too long . . . Needed another fight under his belt . . . got arm-weary . . . that guy's pretty lucky . . . we shoulda nailed him real good along about the tenth . . . this is just what he needed . . . you oughta know this kid better; gives his mother every nickel . . . honest, turns it right over to her . . . lives in a place called Cliffside, N. J. . . . yeah, it looks like he'll have a lotta headaches when the case comes up. That girl was killed when his car bunked into that other one . . . he'll lick Conn the next time . . . oh, leavin'?"

Gus Doesn't Have an Alibi

Gus looked up. His left eye was a little like a flat prune, with a red crescent under it. He tried to crease his sore pan into a smile. And to the sports writers he suddenly blurted: "I haven't an alibi. He's just good. Real good. I laid off too long. Gimme him again, and I'll beat him."

Mike, the boss, came in. The boss was pleased, for the better drawing card had won. The boss, shook hands with Gus, and said that Gus put up a real good fight. Gus said thanks, that he was sorry he didn't win. But Mike grinned. The outcome was all right with Mike.

Off in the distance you could hear the commotion around the other locker room. In that other room, Conn, unmarked, flushed, happy, was yelling in a shower and the room was filled with jovial men . . . the mob and a sprinkling of priests and relatives.

But over in the loser's dressing room, Gus sat on the edge of the rubbing table. Ray, his second, gave him sections of orange to chew on. Then he dipped a piece of cotton in a solution called hemostetique eros, to coagulate the cut under his eye. After that he dabbed it with something called fer-de-lance, a snake venom solution.

Gus, the graceless, forgotten loser, grabbed a water bottle nearby and put it to his puffed lips. But Ray wouldn't let him drink it. "It's too cold for your stommeck," Ray said. "Go in and take your shower. And, listen, after you eat tonight, you go right home and go to bed. You hear me?"

Detroit U. Overpowers Manhattan College, 36-13

By the Associated Press

Detroit, Nov. 18.—For nine minutes today the University of Detroit eleven was almost a three-point-a-minute football machine and the power of their early onslaught carried the Titans to a 36-to-13-victory over Manhattan. A crowd of 10,253 spectators watched the one-sided engagement.

It was the first appearance of Manhattan in the Middle West and the Jaspers were bested in every department of play by the alert Detroiters, who turned the breaks into points.

The rout started on the fourth play of the contest when Bill Schauer, Detroit end, blocked John Supulski's punt on the Manhattan 26. The ball bounced into the end zone and Supulski fell on it for a safety.

That was only the beginning and before nine minutes had elapsed Detroit had three touchdowns.

Two plays after the safety Al Ghesquiere, Detroit's outstanding performer today, shot a 35-yard pass to Schauer, who raced the remaining 20 yards over the goal line.

The same Ghesquiere was on the throwing end of a 17-yard touchdown aerial to Frank Hayes a few minutes later.

The third Detroit touchdown came on a 65-yard march in which a 19-yard run by Ghesquiere and his 21-yard pass to John Biringer were the highlights.

Mrs. Walper Top-Ranking Woman Golfer in the District

Mrs. Stokes Ranks 2d, Survey Shows

Marion Brown, Shorn Of Titles She Held In 1938, Placed 3d In Annual Rankings

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

A final round appearance in two of this section's major women's tourneys, one a winning one and the other a loser, earns for Mrs. Leo Walper the title of the top-ranking women golfer of the District, based on tournament records for the 1939 season.

The District champion was ranked at the top—because she was the District champion, and a final round berth in the Maryland State title play strengthens her claims, in our opinion. In the second spot on the strength of her first important tourney, the Middle Atlantic, is Mrs. Walter Stokes, the bashful Indian Spring representative.

Marion Brown Third

Down two notches from her first place post of 1938, because she fell into losing ways in tourney finals instead of winning ones, is Marion Brown, shorn of the three titles she held last year. But the fact that she went as far as the finals of the District, Mid-Atlantic and her Manor Club play, in addition to winning the District medal, gains the third spot. In addition the 20-year-old business college student hit the headlines in the Women's National, with a victory over Mrs. Glenna Collett Vare, before losing on the twenty-third to Maureen Orcutt.

Mrs. Betty Meckley, with a better out-of-town record than local, inherits the fourth berth, the lowest in many years. The Indian Spring star couldn't get past the semifinals in the three big tourneys and not to it in another and that accounts for the ranking.

Placed Fifth

Mrs. L. G. Pray, Manor Club champion, who turned in a pair of fall upsets over Mrs. Walper and Miss Brown, in addition to the round of four berths in a pair of tourneys, is placed fifth, a shade ahead of Congressional's hard-working golfer, Mrs. Myron Davy, who turned in a pair of fine District championship victories over Mrs. Stokes, in 21 holes, and Mrs. Meckley, 5 and 4, but who couldn't get going after or before that.

The unusually proficient games of the Baltimore women golfers had a hand in the local rankings, as Mrs. T. E. Schluderberg won the Maryland State Medal and accounted for both Marion Brown and Mrs. Meckley in the Mason-Dixon. Mrs. Jerome Sloman's Maryland State triumph and a medal victory for Mrs. E. Boyd Morrow in the Middle Atlantic cut into the accomplishments of the locals.

Noteworthy Performances

Several others are due citations for noteworthy performances, but whose records were confined to one big moment. Mrs. Hume Peabody, for winning a pair of tough matches in the District, Mrs. H. J. Simons, for beating Mrs. Bishop Hill in the same tourney, and then taking Mrs. Walper to the twentieth hole in the second round; Mrs. R. L. Rose, for a distinct upset over Mrs. Schluderberg in the State, after the latter's medal winning performance and for starring in the Philadelphia match. To Mrs. Ora Emge, for defeating Mrs. C. S. Stern in the city tourney. Also to Louise Clayton for her Chevy Chase Club final triumph over Mrs. Hill.

Miss Brown was the stepping stone for the two that preceded her in the year's records. Mrs. Walper scored on the nineteenth over the former two-title champion in the city finals and Mrs. Stokes by a more decisive 5 and 4 margin, the day after Mrs. Meckley lost to her younger opponent after leading 4-up and 7 to play in the M. A. play.

Mrs. Walper had the State title in her grasp before losing an early lead and the match to Mrs. Sloman, and while Mrs. Stokes' triumph was in a more important event, her record in other events was not as good.

The basis for the placing of the six players:

MRS. LEO WALPER—District women's champion, winning two extra-hole battles en route to the title. Runner-up in the Maryland State, to Mrs. Sloman, quarter-finalist in the Middle Atlantic, Capital Club champion and medalist.

MRS. WALTER STOKES—Middle Atlantic champion, routing Marion Brown, 5 and 4, in the finals. Lost in the second round of the Maryland State and first round of the District. Runner-up to Mrs. Betty Meckley in the Indian Spring Club championship, after beating Mrs. C. S. Stern. Tied for low gross, Star Cup.

MARION BROWN—Runner-up champion. Beaten in the final round of the District, Middle Atlantic and Manor Club championship. Won medal in District and Manor Club play. Low gross winner, Post Cup. Went to second round, Maryland State. Beat Mrs. Vare in Nationals before losing on twenty-third to Maureen Orcutt.

MRS. BETTY MECKLEY—Low gross winner in Star, Times-Herald, Miller and Corby Cup play. Semifinalist in Maryland State and Middle Atlantic championships, quarter-finalist in District. Winner of Shawnee Invitation and runner-up in a northern New York event. Indian Spring Club champion and medalist. Won three matches at White Sulphur, before losing to Mrs. Schluderberg.

MRS. L. G. PRAY—Semifinalist in the Maryland State, and the Middle Atlantic, beating Mrs. Walper in the latter. Winner over Marion Brown in the Manor Club championship final upset. Quarter-finalist in the District championship.

MRS. MYRON DAVY—Semifinalist in the city title play, beating Mrs. Stokes and Mrs. Meckley en route. Lost in the first round of both State and Mid-Atlantic play, and was nonqualifier in Nationals. Congressional Club champion and medalist.

Other low gross awards in smaller one-day events were divided among the half-dozen players.

'Tally Ho' Sounds Once More as Fox Hunters Form Club

Leonardtown, Md., Nov. 18 (AP).—It's "Tally-Ho!" again in Southern Maryland with revival of the Bushwood Fox Hunting Club.

The club held its first hunt in five years yesterday, taking two brushes, one in a two-hour run, the other in half that time.

Weekly hunts are planned, said Edmund J. Plowden, master of hounds, and farmers welcome revival of the sport since foxes have been preying on their poultry at night.

Sportsmen from Fairfax, Va., hunted with Plowden yesterday. They were Dr. Clayton Hawfield, J. H. Hawfield, Carl Davis, Wade Davis, J. Stewart, Jack Charles, Dan Simms, Holly Duvall, A. S. Delmude, Tracey Nance, and L. M. Rowen.

Court Time Wins at Montpelier

By Anne Hagner.

Orange, Va., Nov. 18.—Court Time, chestnut gelding owned by Brooks Parker, Pennsylvania sportsman, won the featured Noel Laing steeplechase of the Montpelier Hunt race meeting, held on the estate of Mrs. Marion duPont Scott, near here, today.

Before a crowd of 5,000 enthusiasts, Court Time romped around the 2½-mile brush course in 5:50 to defeat Mrs. Scott's Sapelo and J. C. Brady's Bold Stoke. In a driving finish that had the spectators yelling themselves hoarse, Jockey R. Jones booted home the winner to pay 5-to-1 odds to the gelding's backers.

Taking the lead on the first turn of the gruelling course, Court Time fenced well to defeat eight other top brush horses. Sapelo, favored in the betting, ran gamely and looked as if he might carry Mrs. Scott's blue and rose colors to victory, but he was unable to outstride Parker's entry in the stretch drive.

The victory to the 7-year-old son of Court Day-Correct Time gives Parker a year's possession of the Laing Trophy, donated in memory of the late gentleman rider who made steeplechase history two years ago with the renowned Troublemaker. Court Time was trained by Morris H. Dixon.

In the historic setting of the hunt meeeting, held on the spacious acres of the former home of James Madison, visitors found an ideal set-up for hunt-racing followers. No admission or parking charges are made, and the course is so planned that almost all the fences are visible from rail vantage points.

The Montpelier Cup event, a secondary feature, was slightly disappointing when only four horses answered the bugle call. It was won by Mrs. Arthur White's Bay Dean, 6-year-old thoroughbred by Judge Hay, who received plenty of backing from the hunt country contingent. The Middleburg-owned horse defeated Richard Mellon's Bulveta, a 3-to-2 choice in the betting, and R. V. N. Gambrill's Little Hurd, which finished in that order.

More exciting from the spectators' point of view was the Virginia plate race, second on the card, which was run over the 1-mile flat course. Paul Mellon's fleet bay, Sea Ted, scored a repeat victory, his second in two years, by defeating Brooks Parker's Hants, who led during the early stages. Sea Ted made his move on the far turn and from there on the race was virtually in the bag. Time for the running was 1:44¾.

Summaries:

THE MADISON PLATE (about 1⅛ miles over hurdles)—Won by Mrs. Jane Fowler Bassett's Herroro; second, Montpelier's Hop; third, Thomas T. Mott's Yammer. Different II and Zadora also ran.

THE VIRGINIA PLATE (1 mile on the flat)—Won by Rokeby Stables' Sea Ted; second, Brooks Parker's Hanta; third, Mrs. Anderson Fowler's Chowpatty. Prince Tex, Stampede, Highland Boy and Kirk On also ran.

THE MONTPELIER CUP (about 2 miles over brush)—Won by Mrs. Arthur White's Bay Dean; second, Richard Mellon's Bulveta; third, R. V. N. Gambrill's Little Hurd. Round Bend also ran.

THE BELLEVUE PLATE (1¾ miles on the flat)—Won by Montpelier's Navy; second, John Bosley's Artist; third, T. T. Mott's Playdema. Lynx Eye, Armenidas and Albess also ran.

NILON, first away, opened a lead at once, was steadied along, but had to be put to pressure in closing stages to hold HE GOES safe. HE GOES, forced to race between horses for half, came to contention boldly approaching stretch and was wearing down winner at end. DUNLAD lacked early speed, improved position between horses, moved up menacingly in midstretch and weakened. DROSERA, off slowly, improved position steadily and closed gamely. GOSSIP TIME was close up to stretch and faltered badly.

Daily Double, PURCELLVILLE and NILON, Paid $39.80.

SHORTSTOP had keen early speed to draw clear and fought it out willingly when challenged. CHALLAMORE was off in first flight, went evenly and failed to rally in stretch run. BEAUZAR, off slowly, came with good energy at end.

Sandy Boot Wins Feature Bowie Race

Stretch Drive Brings Victory to Patridge Entry, Paying $19.20

stretch drive. Third money in the field went to W. L. Brann's Aethelwold, which was trying to double for Challedon.

The customers, enjoying the sport under ideal conditions, installed Aethelwold the favorite with Conde Rico, a South American horse, the second choice. When the result was made official there was a $19.20 pay-off on Sandy Boot. The winner's time was about average for the race at 1:48 1-5.

Sandy Boot reached a new high in money won today when he won more in this single race than he has in 17 previous starts this year. His victory in the Prince Georges was worth $4,450 in contrast to the $4,100 he has picked up the hard way before being shipped here from Pimlico.

The new Puett starting gate, with the horses coming out of box-like stalls, was used for the first time at this track.

Clodion, in the colors of R. A. Moore was first to show in front when Starter Milton sent the field away. The leader was accompanied by Aethelwold and Bosley. Sandy Boot, as already related, had dropped back to last position. Clodion stopped going along the backstretch and Aethelwold opened a good lead on Bosley.

Meanwhile, Sandy Boot was still trailing and under a grip of Jockey W. L. Johnson.

At the far turn, Sandy Boot began the move that was to bring him victory. Jockey Johnson put him to a drive and he fairly skimmed the rail from that point home, always gaining. He was fifth turning into the stretch as Aethelwold and Bosley bunched up.

In the final straightaway, Sandy Boot came on, caught the leader, and shook off Bosley. The Boot to Boot gelding was opening a gap at the finish.

Maiden races marked both ends of the daily double. In the first race, Purcellville, owned and trained by Preston M. Burch, of Washington, scored under the handling of Jockey Mannie Berg. Burgoo Trail and Argos followed the winner across the line. Purcellville paid an $8.20 mutuel.

R. B. Archer's Nilon finally emerged from the nonwinner ranks in the second race and completed a $39.80 payoff in the daily double. This On Watch filly won under a drive from He Goes with Dunlad, a 179-1 shot, in third position. Nilon paid an individual mutuel of $6.50.

Gustave Ring, Washington and Baltimore builder, watched his colors score in the third race named the Jock Purse, for the fast sprinter once owned by E. B. McLean, of Washington. It was Rumba Gus that took down the major portion of the purse but the Saxon colt accomplished the feat by only a head marking. Shortstop, from the Dixiana Stable, was second, with J. W. Y. Martin's Challamore, third. The last named was an odds-on favorite. Rumba Gus, making his second start of the fall season, paid $13.60.

Brown Smothers Connecticut, 41-0

Providence, R. I., Nov. 18 (AP).—Brown University's eleven combined an air show and a track meet today to rout the University of Connecticut, 41-0. Shut off from scoring in the last quarter, after tallying two touchdowns in each of the first three periods, the Bruins gained a total net yardage of 280 by rushing and 93 by passing, as against 125 and 10. The home club tallied once through the air, but its aerials set up two other tallies.

Dogs . . .

By George Berner

BERNER

Because pure-bred dogs come from so many corners of the earth, there are many misconceptions held by the general public concerning the 108 breeds recognized by the American Kennel Club. The names of the various breeds seem to be particularly puzzling to most people, and few can understand why some are capitalized and others are not. This confusion is increased because foreign words often seem like proper nouns.

There is a reason behind the name of every breed, but more often than not mistaken meanings are taken by the general public, even from the names of the English breeds or breeds named in English. For instance, the bloodhound is not so named because he is vicious or because he can scent the blood of criminals. He was originally called the bloodedhound because he was the first dog to be bred pure in blood, so far as we know.

The Boston Terrier's name, of course, is explanatory. He is named after city where the breed originated—Boston, Mass. He must be the "Boston Terrier," however, not Bull Terrier, Boston Bull Terrier or any of the other names by which he is called. The Setter, so common among hunters, gets his name from the Setting Spaniels of ancient times from which he undoubtedly descended. The Setting Spaniel was so called because he was trained to crouch low when he found birds so that the hunter could cast a large net over him and the birds.

We have heard many very funny stories concerning the naming of the Fox Terrier. Everyone will give some sort of opinion when asked. The breed was not used to chase foxes, the hounds did that, but the Fox Terrier was carried by the hunters until the fox was denned. His job then was to enter the den, kill the fox and bring him out.

The Dachshund wasn't designed to retrieve collar buttons from under the dresser, as his underslug chassis would indicate. He was bred long, low and narrow to enable him to enter the dens of the Dachs, which is a small burrowing animal resembling the American badger.

The Chow Chow, a very popular breed in the United States, as his name indicates, is entirely Oriental. He is the utility dog of China, being used as a sled dog, watch dog and hunting dog. He is bred and killed for his fur and, so help us, he is even eaten. His name "Chow" means, in Chinese, something edible.

Any school boy can tell you how the Pointer got his name, because of his instinctive pointing of birds in the field. He comes, too, from the Spanish spaniels of long ago as do the setters and spaniels as we know them today. Our little friend the Cocker Spaniel will stump nearly everyone who is asked how he got his name. He is America's number 1 dog in popularity now and has been for the past few years. Most people, even Cocker owners, do not know that he is an excellent hunting or bird dog. He is, and that's how he got his name, hunting woodcock in England when you and I were awfully young, Maggie.

Some of the foreign named breeds are very interesting. The "papillion" is a little French dog so named because its fringed ears resemble the wings of a butterfuly. The basset hound, also French, is so named because he is built close to the ground.

The schipperke is a little Belgian and earned its Flemish name, which means "little captain," because it was found so generally as a guard on canal boats. The name, incidentally, is pronounced Skipper-kee, accent on the skip (page Mr. Webster).

The Hungarian breed, kovasz, received its name because of its traditional occupation as the "armed guard of the nobility." The Schnauzer is so called because of his bearded muzzle and another German breed, the boxer, gets his name from his habit of fighting with his paws as well as everything else."

The "cairn terrier," a swell little Scotchman and, incidentally, the dog you saw in the "Wizard of Oz," got his name because he was small enough to hunt through the Scottish cairns, once used to mark warriors' graves.

Things are happening out at Mrs. Powell's Powkim Kennels and Mrs. Powell is all puffed up about it. Her little Cocker, California Rose, just presented her with eight beautiful pups, seven blacks and one red. The Daddy is Powkim's Gallant Knight. This is the first litter for both, really a bumper crop, so to speak.

Cy Woolner of Adlea Kennels stopped in yesterday and told us that arrangements had been made with the Pennsylvania Railroad to have a special car on the seven o'clock train next Saturday so that folks going to the Philadelphia show can take their dogs in the car with them. The dog show special leaves at seven in the morning and returns at eleven. Reservations aren't necessary, get your ticket, grab your dogs and board the dog car.

QUERIES

Q.—How many points are necessary for a dog to become a champion?

A.—A dog must win or earn 15 points in A. K. C. licensed shows to become a champion.

Q.—To settle an argument will you state in your column what you do when one of your dog gets sick? Do you take him to a vet or doctor him yourself? This is to settle a bet.

A.—We take our sick dogs to a vet as quickly as we can get there. Then we argue with said vet about what's to be done, etc., and usually get thrown out. Then we go home and worry and worry the vet via the telephone. They always do the wrong thing (we think) but the dogs invariably get better, so maybe they know more about it than we do.

Q.—Is it true that the Cocker Spaniel, the Springer Spaniel, the setter and the pointer are all related?

A.—Not very closely, although they are all probably descendants of the ancient Spanish Spaniels.

SOUTHWESTERN AND FAR WESTERN FOOTBALL GAMES:

Texas A. & M. Gains 181 Yards by Passing, Beats Rice, 19-0

Aggies' Ten Completed Aerials Score

John Kimbrough Collects 92 Yards In 17 Attempts By Ground Route

By the Associated Press

Houston, Tex., Nov. 18.—Its offensive ticking like a fine watch, Texas A and M. rolled over the punchless Rice Owls in a 19-to-0 conquest today.

Big John Kimbrough, the demon fullback, and a couple of other backfield gems, Bill Conaiser and Derace Moser, sped behind superb interference to bury a crippled but game Rice eleven that could rack up only 8 yards net.

The Aggies' furious charge brought them 339 yards as Rice was completely baffled by a versatile attack.

Passes Gain 181 Yards

Twenty times the Farmers passed and ten times the ball stuck against a receiver. The passing total—181—exceeded the ground values, although none could say Jarrin' John Kimbrough failed to do his usual stuff. The big fellow gathered 92 yards in 17 tries for a 5.4 average.

Olie Cordill, a grand back, did his best to keep the Owls in the game with his spiral punts and broken-field runs.

Kimbrough plunged over the first score in the opening quarter. The drive started on the Rice 42. Kimbrough's plunging and a short shovel pass carried to the 31.

Then Moser scampered to the 7 in a couple of essays from a spread formation. Kimbrough pounded over in two line plunges. Audish missed the point try.

Slippery Rock May Lose 'Brain Bowl' Chance, Despite Win

Slippery Rock, Pa., Nov. 18 (AP).—The slam-bang Slippery Rock State Teachers were all set for a "Brain Bowl" football game with the Maryville, Mo., Teachers when the sad word came tonight that the match might be called off.

The unbeaten and untied Rockets had said they would gladly take on the Westerners in the proposed "brain bowler" November 25 if they won today. Whereupon Slippery Rock smashed California, Pa., State Teachers, 54-0, and were eager for the blood of the Maryville eleven when the latter announced National Guard training might interfere with the game.

Landon Prep Beaten, 19-6, By St. Andrew's

Trail Throughout; Amussen Registers Only Local Touchdown

Special Dispatch to The Post

Middleton, Del., Nov. 18.—St. Andrews Prep won its sixth straight game of the season today, 19-6, over Landon Prep of Washington, D. C., to wind up the first undefeated grid season in the history of the school.

From the first quarter, when Quarterback White opened scoring with a 1-yard touchdown plunge and successfully converted, the Saints were never behind. They added touchdowns in the second and third periods to coast to victory. White was also responsible for the second tally when he intercepted a Landon aerial and raced 30 yards. In the third quarter Tom Bright made the outcome a near-certainity, getting off a 29-yard dash to the 1-foot line and then shoving over.

The only touchdown for the invaders came in the second period. Halfback Amussen turned the trick when he scooted around end for 38 yards to cross the goal.

Boys Club No. 4 Wins Police Grid League Crown

A 54-yard drive, ending in a touchdown, brought the Police Boys Club No. 4 the 125-pound championship of the Police Boys Club League yesterday. A crowd of 1,500, including Maj. Ernest W. Brown and members of the board of directors of the Police Boys Club, saw No. 4 defeat No. 10 by a 7-0 margin on the Lincoln Memorial field. The 70-piece Boys Club band entertained between halves.

Buddy Vernon, the winner's quarterback, drove over from the 1-yard line for the lone touchdown. Denny Denikos, a little fellow, was outstanding for the losers. A trophy and individual gold footballs, as well as a football presented by the Sports Center, went to the winners.

No. 4 plays the Northwest All-Stars at Griffith Stadium on December 2.

Marquette Defeats Texas Tech, 22-19

Victors Rally in Third Period to Beat Red Raiders

By the Associated Press

Lubbock, Tex., Nov. 18.—Marquette launched a smooth offense and stubborn defense to triumph, 22 to 19, today over the Texas Tech Red Raiders who had outscored and outplayed the Golden Avalanche most of the way.

Trailing 15-19, Marquette started a drive late in the third period and pushed the ball to the 3 as the quarter ended. James Richardson threw a scoring pass to Robert Sleske early in the fourth to give the Avalanche victory. Kemnitz converted.

In a desperate last-minute attempt to come back, C. L. Storrs threw a pass to Francis Bingham, Tech end, who dropped the ball for an incompletion behind the goal line.

Marquette took the lead with a safety and a touchdown in the first period. Vosberg, big Marquette end, blocked Charley Calhoun's punt and the ball rolled back across the goal line, where it was covered by Tech.

A minute later, John Maltsch shot a long pass to Vosberg who was downed on Tech's one. Fullback Douglas Renzel went over, but Kemnitz's try for point was blocked.

Late in the period Tech's Tom Douglass recovered a Marquette fumble on the Avalanche 40. A series of passes climaxed by Lefty Bill Dodd's heave to Storrs on the 3 brought the score. Flusche's try for point was wide.

Ross Knipfel, salvaged the Eagles from a shutout with his successful solo dash in the last period.

Oregon State Routs Bears

By the Associated Press

Corvallis, Oreg., Nov. 18.—Oregon State College put on a savage second-half drive to route the California Bears, 21-0, today, thereby remaining theoretically in the running for Rose Bowl honors should it win from U. C. L. A. next week and should someone knock off unbeaten U. S. C.

The Staters had a difficult time getting started before a homecoming crowd of 9,000. They lost the ball three times on fumbles and once on a blocked kick in the first half.

Frantic 66-yd. Run Wins for Texas U.

T. C. U. Bows, 25-19, in "Daddy" of All S. W. Battles; Davis Hero in Struggle Marked by Several Long Runs

By the Associated Press

Austin, Tex., Nov. 18.—One frantic run, Ban[illegible]weight Gilly Davis' 66-yard effort as dusk engulfed the muddied fi[illegible]d, today capped and sealed what must go down as the father of all thrillers in Southwest Conference football—Texas' 25-19 conquest of Texas Christian.

Intermittent rain, precarious footing and wet footballs were nothing in the see-saw battle of six touchdowns, two safeties and three runs past 50 yards.

Lagging, 14-19, as they went into the third period, Texas four times arrived at a chance for a touchdown, but killing breaks stopped them. Twice Texas Christian, backed down inside its 5-yard line, protected that slim lead with intentional safeties.

But they didn't reckon with Gilly Davis. From his own 39, where Texas Christian had kicked after an intentional safety, he suddenly emerged from a pileup at right tackle and started down the sidelines. He dodged in and out and finally just outran the Christians' secondary.

Santa Clara And Uclans In 0-0 Draw

By the Associated Press

Los Angeles, Nov. 18.—Santa Clara University and the Bruins of the University of California at Los Angeles battled to a scoreless standstill today in a grid battle that was slow for 59 minutes and jammed with excitement in the final 60 seconds.

The Uclans finally mustered a sustained drive in the fading moments of the nonconference engagement, and with Halfback Kenny Washington and Fullback Leo Cantor leading the drive, swept from within the shadows of their own goal posts to the Santa Clara four in a march that brought the 50,000 spectators to their feet.

A holding penalty shoved the Bruins back to the 20, however, and with 5 seconds remaining, Big Jack Sommers, left guard, tried a field goal from the 27. It fell short, and as a Bronco tried to run it out the gun ended the game.

The result had no bearing on the Bruins' Rose Bowl hopes, since the Pasadena entry from the Far West is drawn from the Pacific Coast Conference and outside games do not count.

Cougars Make 71-Yard Drive for Touchdown In Opening Period

By the Associated Press

Palo Alto, Calif., Nov. 18.—Washington State College showed a brief spark of life in the first period of its Pacific Coast Conference football game with the Stanford Indians today to put over a touchdown and win, 7-0.

Washington State's score climaxed a 71-yard drive, the only sustained advance of the game. Starting from their own 29 the Cougars pushed over the score in 15 plays.

Fullback Dick Renfro hit left guard for the touchdown from the 1. Fred Brown, veteran end, kicked the point.

Stanford on its first series of Downs gave fans hopes that at last they might get the football victory that has eluded them all season. Left Halfback Pete Kmetovic reeled off 25 yards on the first play to put the ball on the Washington State 36. Fullback Norman Standlee followed with another first down on the W. S. C. 25. Then Stanford reverted to form and the backfield started losing yardage. Four plays later the Cougars took over on downs on their own 29 and started off on their touchdown march.

The Federal Diary:

U. S. Artist's Work Enjoys A Wide Demand in Capital

CLYDIA MAE RICHARDSON

By Alfred Friendly

Unquestionably the most popular artist in Washington, judging by the volume of her handiwork framed on Government office walls, is a young woman whose name, paradoxically, is almost unknown.

She is Mrs. Clydia Mae Richardson. She engrosses State Department and miscellaneous Presidential documents—those impressive engraved sheets imperiously commanding "Know ye by these presents" that George Spelvin has been named official representative to the International Conference on Widgets, Digits and Gadgets; or that his brother, Otto Spelvin, has been appointed director of the Wax, Fats and Oils Administration.

These are the beautifully written documents that are hugged to the bosom of the appointee as he rushes to the picture framer and later hung on his office wall. Then, they are carried home at the change of an administration and placed over the library mantel. They are finally rediscovered decades afterward, along with a college diploma and a testimonial certificate, in the family attic.

Singularly, although Mrs. Richardson has had the odd job of turning out beautiful penmanship for six years, her usual, natural handwriting is completely different and relatively undistinguished. In ordinary personal communications she uses a typewriter.

But at her desk in the State Department all this is changed. Using a strange pen that juts out obliquely from its holder, she painstakingly but deftly fills in the blank spaces on the artificial parchments. So perfect is her duplication of the engraved script that a touch of the finger is necessary to reveal where the engraving stops and the writing begins.

In an ordinary day some 30 of these documents pass over Mrs. Richardson's desk. They may range from a routine promotion of a foreign service officer to the credentials of an ambassador plenipotentiary and extraordinary and include an appointment of an independent agency head or of a member of an international delegation.

Almost all of the papers are filled in with writing known as engraver's script. The letters are drawn rather than written. To inscribe a single name may take as long as five minutes.

Should the occasion demand, Mrs. Richardson could do fine engrossing in half a dozen alphabet forms besides engraver's script, such as Gothic or Old English. She is also adept at illuminating and color work.

She prepared for her job by a four-year course in engrossing. She is not quite certain how she chose her profession.

Now and again, she confesses, she makes a mistake and calls the eraser into use. She uses an ordinary eraser, similar to the one on a pencil. The only difference is that it is rigged up to an electric vibrator.

Debutantes to Enjoy Gala Season

SMASHING all records, the list of debutantes for 1939-40 has reached well over the half-hundred mark, topping last year's list of 30. Wars may have Europe in a turmoil, and diplomatic parties may be virtually a minus quantity, but from Thanksgiving right on through to the new year Washington will see a bud blossom almost every day.

In contrast to other seasons this year's crop started things—in the debutante word—a-humming early. During June, when all Washington was a-dither with the arrival of the King and Queen of England, six top flight debutantes were presented by their parents. The spring deb is comparatively new to the Capital scene but the custom was widely acclaimed. These girls will be very much in the picture when the traditional season starts on Thanksgiving. Many functions, such as small dinners and dances, will be given this season in honor of the early debutantes.

With President Roosevelt's proclamation switching Thanksgiving from the last Thursday in November to November 23, the debs were thrown into a momentary panic. Some invitations had already been engraved simply "Thanksgiving." Harassed mothers wailed that no one would know just which day was meant. All such difficulties have been ironed out by now, however, and it seems to have added just one more "holiday" to the calendar.

Come Thanksgiving—whichever day you prefer—debs will be all over the place, taking the social spotlight away from the Diplomatic Corps, official notables and even cave-dwelling society. Approximately half of the mammoth crop will bow then while others will come to the fore at Christmas time.

Emphasis this year is on teas in the home. A few lavish balls, however, will be given with the usual number of dinners preceding.

While at first glance quantity, rather than quality seems to have the upper hand, the reverse is actually the case; quality is definitely the debs battle cry, for lists are being carefully scanned by both mothers and expert social secretaries.

Ever since Washington was veined by the Pennsylvania avenue that originally was a muddy little street, eligible daughters have stepped out to make their bows to Capital society. Since then, season in and season out, young ladies who achieve the partying age have let it known by a formal debut that they are accepting invitations.

Back in the old days upper-crust debs bowed at Rauscher's, that glamorous landmark of a by-gone era. As a matter of fact there are still a number of dowagers around town who talk longingly of the famous spot.

The post-war debutante came out at lavish parties in hotels where the guest lists sometimes numbered over 1,000 and the sky was the limit as far as expenses was concerned. At the present time, however, all bows are made in private homes, exclusive clubs or in the case of official daughters (such as Jean Brocone Wallace, daughter of the Secretary of Agriculture and Mrs. Henry Wallace, and Mary Margaret Jackson, daughter of the Solicitor General and Mrs. Robert H. Jackson) in one of the larger hotels, where many can be invited.

Winsome Mary Jackson, daughter of the Solicitor General and Mrs. Robert Jackson, will be presented to society in the Christmas holidays with her very good friend, Jean Wallace, daughter of the Secretary of Agriculture and Mrs. Henry Wallace, lone Cabinet debutante.

MISS JOANNA HUNTINGTON,
the first of the season's debs to be presented, made her bow at a reception given early last summer by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Chapin Huntington. They will entertain again for her at a tea on Christmas eve at their home, 1906 Twenty-third street.

Oil Shortage Germany's Biggest Problem

HITLER'S mechanized army depends on synthetic fuels since British blockade cut off 80 per cent of Nazi supply.

in Persia and the Near East are controlled by the British. Beneath this private road in Persia a pipeline, owned by English firms, carries the precious fluid to refineries. At present the Reich must depend on Russia and some smaller Rumanian and Polish fields.

Acme Photos.

RUMANIAN OIL—CAN NAZIS USE IT?

Allied experts scoff at the claims that oil from Russia and the Rumanian fields such as the one shown above can provide an ample supply for the Nazi forces. Engineers say Germany does not have the proper refineries to produce high octane fuel required for airplane motors. With the South American supply practically shut off, British and French warships in the Black Sea are a threat to oil shipments from Russian fields.

"AS THE OIL FLOWS, SO THE WAR GOES"

Life-blood of a modern mechanized army is oil. Lack of it will stop a tank quicker than any tank trap. Synthetic fuels have never proved satisfactory for propelling the heavier machines.

ELIZABETH ARDEN

HAS CREATED FOR YOU HER NEW

VELVA CREAM PERMANENT WAVE

The Velva Cream Permanent Wave gives a most natural and lasting curl to hair which is exceptional. It is a cream wave, which means that cream is steamed into the hair, leaving it soft and glossy, with each strand shining and "alive". It makes "doing" your hair a delight.
